HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 1, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the Most High, we rejoice that there is one God and Father of us all, who is over all, through all, and in all. We praise Thee for Him whose footsteps are revealed on earth. Heavenly Father, just now let us feel the breath of the higher world. In a serious and reverent spirit we wait for this. May we be led in the practice of every duty and virtue. Almighty God, most graciously abide with our Speaker and the Congress. O Spirit of our blessed Lord, anoint our eyes that we may see, heal us with Thy touch, and speak to us that we may behold Thy glory. Strengthen us to greet the unseen with fortitude, the future with eagerness and not with reluctance, with confidence and not regret. With quenchless aspiration and abounding faith may we pass these days as the faithful leaders and servants of our people throughout the land. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, March 29, 1935, was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 404. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia in excess of that required for public projects and improvements, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5913) "making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", numbered 7 and 25.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF (H. J. RES. 117)

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes, be recommitted to the Committee of Conference.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], explain why he wants to have the joint resolution recommitted?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TABER. Then I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is going to object anyway.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and recommit the conference report on House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes, to the Committee of Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire to use some of his time?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to know what this is all about. This is a most remarkable procedure. This bill was brought before the Appropriations Committee in January, not quite, but almost 3 months ago, and we were told that the relief funds were almost exhausted, that we must make haste, and that unless we passed the bill in 2 weeks the relief funds would be out and there would be nothing to take care of the destitute.

The bill passed the House in about 2 weeks. It was perfectly apparent it was not a relief bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum. We will have to have a quorum here anyway for a vote. It is well that all the Members should understand this matter. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-five Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

[Roll No. 42]

Allen	Berlin	Casey	Darrow
Andrew, Mass.	Bolton	Chapman	Dies
Bankhead	Brennan	Cooley	Dingell
Beam	Brooks	Crowther	Doutrich

Drewry	Hancock, N. C.	McAndrews	Sabath
Duffey, Ohio	Hart	McKeough	Sadowski
Dunn, Miss.	Hartley	McLeod	Shannon
Faddis	Hess	McMillan	Snyder
Ferguson	Higgins, Conn.	Meeks	Stack
Frey	Igoe	Mitchell, Ill.	Sumners, Tex.
Gambrill	Johnson, Tex.	Norton	Sweeney
Gillette	Kennedy, Md.	O'Brien	Taylor, Tenn.
Goldsborough	Kerr	Palmisano	Thomas
Granfield	Lamneck	Patton	Wadsworth
Green	Lemke	Peyster	White
Greenway	Lesinski	Polk	Wigglesworth
Griswold	Lundeen	Quinn	Wolcott

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I started to say a while ago that this bill was brought up in a hurry. It was passed by the House in a hurry. We did not have time to consider the bill and it was impossible to allocate the funds. The bill then went over to the Senate, where it stayed 2 months, and the Senate made some sort of an allocation but not an effective one. It goes to conference and a conference report is filed limiting some things and trying to put the bill somewhere where somebody might have control over the matter.

In this bill the House delegated all of its authority with reference to this money. The Senate has practically delegated all its authority and the conference report practically delegates all authority. Now the chairman of the conferees comes in here and moves to recommit the bill to conference. For what purpose? It must be some purpose that will not stand the light of day, for no one dares to come here and tell us why they want this bill recommitted. It must be for some purpose contrary to the Constitution of the United States and contrary to the liberties of the American people or they on that side would come out here and tell us the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Democratic Members of the House are so subservient that they take their stuff done up in packages blind?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do not worry about them.

Mr. TABER. I do not worry about you. I know that it is practically the purpose to cease to consider legislation over there on the Democratic side, or to care what is in it as long as you get your orders on what to do. Is it not about time that the House of Representatives knew what it was doing? Is it not about time that the Membership of the House of Representatives insist on doing their own constitutional duty with reference to legislation?

We have all sorts of rumors around here, rumors that this member of the Cabinet or some member of the "brain trust" objects to some provision that the conferees have inserted providing that some employment must be provided if the money is to be spent. It looks as though the "brain trust" wanted to use all this money for rackets and not to provide employment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How will they be able to report it back until the President returns from his fishing trip?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman means that the fishing trip is more important than the bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. They must learn what to do.

Mr. TABER. Of course, they must have their orders, and they must be operating under sealed orders, because that is the only kind they like to work under.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not wait until he comes back?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. In the morning papers it is stated that the Speaker of the House wired the President in order that Congress might receive their orders so we could act on this particular bill. If the Speaker of the House has received his orders from the fishing expeditionary forces, then he should enlighten the Membership of the House with respect to the matter that we might know what the President has to say and can then use our own best judgment for the country's good.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to make an observation?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I am not particularly interested in any reference of the measure, because I cannot conceive of its being possible to make it any worse than it is in its present form. I have the fear that the adoption of this bill puts us down the road so far toward a paternalistic state as to make it impossible for us to ever turn back toward sound constitutional government without violent breach of public faith, with destruction of private property rights. [Applause.]

While this bill professes the purpose of ending the dole by putting people to work, in effect it is an invitation and an urge to the people to look to the Government for solution of all their problems. It puts the Government into a field of activity into which it should never have entered and out of which it should take itself as quickly as possible. It pledges the Government to uneconomic expenditure of public money amounting to waste on a gigantic scale. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has made a fine, patriotic statement. Would that a majority of the Membership on the Democratic side of the aisle would put patriotism before blind, ignorant partisanship and vote down this terrible bill which will destroy American liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New York says that no one dares tell the House why this motion to recommit the conference report is made. I do not see why the gentleman should be so interested in debating this conference report. He was on the conference; his Republican colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] was on the conference; and neither one signed or approved the conference report. [Applause.] Neither one even voted for the bill on its original passage through the House. So that the enemies of the bill and the enemies of the administration are getting up here and trying to tell Democrats in this House how to vote.

Why should the bill be recommitted? I am not going to go into this at length, but there is a provision in this measure requiring 33 1/3 percent of the money to be used for direct labor on all projects under the $900,000,000. If this had been direct and indirect labor it would be a different proposition, but it is confined practically to labor actually performed on the site of the project. The man, no matter who he is, who fails to realize that the employment problem in the United States is national and not local, fails to measure up to proper citizenship in this country. Indirect labor is of just as much importance as direct labor, because indirect labor is that labor which is expended in the fabrication of the material used in these projects, and the fabrication of material for these projects is accomplished in your cities where the factories are located and where the great proportion of unemployment exists, and yet they want it confined to one-third for direct labor, practically on the sites of the projects when such sites may not be in congested centers where great unemployment exists.

This will mean the killing of every project where the direct labor on the site is less than 33 1/3 percent of the loan, yet the indirect labor, the labor actually employed in fabricating the material may be 20 or 30 percent in addition to the direct labor. For instance, the amount for slum clearance allotted by the Senate amendment is $450,000,000 and the direct labor is only 28 percent. Grade-crossing elimination, which may be done by contract, though a loan, is only 30 percent.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not now.

Rural electrification and, in fact, construction of all hydroelectric plants and necessary incidental work to be done is only 30 percent. In other words, taking your total appropriation $900,000,000, there is practically one-third of the projects that would be excluded under the 33 1/3 percent for direct labor practically on the site.

Another amendment the Senate put in the bill prohibited any money for warships, ammunition, matériel, and so forth. That is all right, but as written in the conference report it excludes new construction for Army or Navy posts, Reserves, and so forth. In that construction, 70 percent is labor.

Ah, Mr. TABER, we want to pass this bill as quickly as possible, but we want to make it practicable and efficient. The President has requested it and has assumed responsibility for it. We owe it to him to give him a bill that he will make a success of in shifting from the dole to honest labor.

That is all we ask. We ask you to vote to recommit the report. You will have another report giving the President a practicable bill, one that he can administer and get rid of the dole, shifting people on the dole to gainful employment. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is a disposition on the part of the conferees to eliminate the so-called "amendment" offered by Senator GEORGE?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The House conferees fought that, but it was contended that its elimination would endanger the conference report in the Senate. Rather than endanger the bill, we let it stay in it, because it is harmless, ineffective, and cannot be put into effect, because it does not provide for any reduction of the processing tax nor its elimination.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this provision for one-third to be expended for direct labor applies only to subsection (g). In other words, it applies only to the provisions for loans or grants to States and subdivisions thereof. The question of roads and grade crossings mentioned by the gentleman from Texas is in another subsection and are not involved in this proposal for one-third direct labor.

Most of the loans or grants heretofore made under the Public Works Administration have been for public schools and other public buildings. I am reliably informed that on this class of projects the direct labor on the job is somewhere between 45 and 50 percent of the total cost of the project. Therefore the proposed limitation of one-third of the cost for direct labor will not hamper any loan or grant for a school or other public building.

It applies only to one subsection in section 3, and the thought behind this provision is that if this is to be a real relief bill there should be some relief in it. The contention of the Senate is that if a municipality or subdivision of a State comes to the Federal Government for money, for a loan or a grant, that at least one-third of that money loaned or granted should be expended on direct relief, a thoroughly reasonable proposition. This provision does not apply to any other section in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Wait until I am through. The figure of one-third, of course, was a compromise, as all conference reports are compromises, and it was put at one-third in order to cover all of the sample projects given before the committee by Admiral Peoples in his testimony. The Senate conferees held out for sometime for a 50-percent provision instead of one-third. Further than that, there has been a tendency in the past for State subdivisions and municipalities to come to the P. W. A. with projects not for the primary purpose of giving relief but for the purpose of furthering, at Federal expense, some pet local object that ought to be financed locally. This is what the Senate has tried to prevent. If the Congress is going to loan or grant money to States and subdivisions thereof for purposes of relieving unemployment, it is only reasonable to insist that at least one-third shall go to direct relief in the State or subdivision where the work is performed. This provision will also check favoritism, political or otherwise. It will set up a uniform standard.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BACON. I have no more time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are in a very peculiar position here today. As I understand the situation, the conferees, or at least a majority of them, signed this conference report. In listening to the statement made by the chairman of the conferees, I did not understand him to give any information to the House as to what new light or information has been brought to him which causes him to change his position between the time he signed the conference report last Friday and this morning. If the reports carried in the newspapers are correct, and that is the only reason given so far why the conferees are backing up on their own conference report, it is that the report is not satisfactory to the "brain trust" and the various people in the executive departments that are to administer the fund, then it seems to me that Congress has reached a pretty low ebb when it cannot even pass on a conference report without getting orders from the Chief Executive. It also seems to me that the Chief Executive himself is more interested in having a good time on the palatial yacht of Mr. Astor in southern waters than he is in passing this relief bill. It is also specially interesting to know you cannot do anything without first asking his permission.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, shame on you.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I mean exactly what I say, whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] agrees with me or not. I have the floor, and he can answer what I say in his own time. The President told us that this is a very important measure, and that it had to be passed before the 10th of February. It is now nearly 2 months from that time, and his own representatives here in the House want to send it back to the committee and delay it for a still longer time. They will not tell us the reason for this unprecedented action. Your action now is characteristic of your actions during the entire consideration of this bill. You evidently do not want anyone to know what your plans are or what you intend to do. Why this secrecy? Why should the people not know something about such an important and expensive piece of legislation? The only excuse I have heard is that 30 percent of the relief bill must be expended for labor.

Mr. BACON. Only 30 percent of one part of the relief bill.

Mr. SNELL. That applies to only $900,000,000 of it. If this is a relief bill, is there anything unreasonable to ask that at least 30 percent of a part of it be spent for direct labor? If there is any objection to this you better change the name and purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, we are again having another chapter in the distressing and painful spectacle of finding our Republican brethren in the House unable to make any contribution to the present dilemma in which the country finds itself, except to throw monkey wrenches into the machinery and place obstacles in the way of the recovery bandwagon. My two distinguished colleagues from New York on the Appropriations Committee now plead with the House in behalf of some provision which they say is in this conference report. Do not be deceived by that. Neither of the gentlemen voted for the bill originally, and neither of them would vote for the conference report this minute if it were brought up for a vote. They did not sign the conference report and they are not for it. There is only one thing they agree on. They are unanimous in wanting to do everything on earth they can do to block the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and they do not miss any effort to do that.

Mr. TABER. The program is bad, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. Shame on the genial Kentucky colonel, Mr. SNELL, that he should get up and let his partisan feelings cause him to cast aspersions on the great Chief Executive of the United States, who for the moment is trying to get some much-needed relaxation. Oh, yes; that is just what he did. What was the object of all these remarks about the President being on vacation?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not now.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Why not?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not yield to the lady.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. You know it is not often we men are in a position where we can make the ladies sit down and keep quiet. [Laughter.]

My friends on the Democratic side, the minority is very much interested in recovery until some plan comes for recovery, and then they are against it.

Now, there is nothing unusual about this request. Many times committees in this House have reported bills, conference committees have brought in reports, and after they were filed some matter has come up making it desirable that they should reconsider it, and a unanimous-consent request is made and is granted, and no one ever pays any attention to it. The conferees take it back or the committee takes the bill back to the committee and they fix it up as they think it should be presented, and they bring it to the House. The House has lost no right. It has a full opportunity to consider every provision in it and it has not lost any of its rights.

You would not hear anything of this request today and there would not be all this mess about it today except our friends know that once this instrumentality of recovery is placed in the hands of the President, the recovery bandwagon and the new deal will leap forward. When it does leap forward it will flatten out a little more those good gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, if it is possible to flatten them out more. There ought not be a single Democratic vote against this motion today. I appeal to you gentlemen on the Democratic side. It is no use to appeal to the Republicans. I appeal to you gentlemen for a 100-percent party vote for this motion, because the Republicans are making it a partisan matter. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to listen to Simon Legree over on the Democratic side and hear him crack the whip and watch you fellows get under the lash. We all remember how in 1933 it was said a great emergency came upon us and the President went off across the Atlantic and Pacific on that fishing trip. Friday a member of the conference committee brought in this conference report and expected us to vote for it. Now, between Friday and Monday another emergency has arisen, and you do not want us to vote for the conference report until you have orders. Tell us why you do not want to vote for it this morning? That is all we want to know.

Mr. KELLER. Because we can do better.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because you can do better? What has happened? You can do like Wallace did with the A. A. A. He said that was a political expediency. Is this another one?

Mr. KELLER. Maybe.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I guess probably it is. Trying to fix up a job for somebody. Is that the reason you want the report recommitted?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to follow the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] when he says the Republicans of the House today are obstructing the passage of this bill. The parliamentary situation is we are actually voting against a delay. I do not think any Republican can be justly charged with partisanship when he stands up and asserts the American people are expecting, in this tremendous relief bill, a major share of the money shall go to the people who are actually unemployed. [Applause.]

There could be no other justification for the bill. Huge taxes which result from this legislation can only be excused on the ground it gives actual relief to the vast army of unemployed who are in need. It certainly is no time to waste the resources of a nation, to waste money which may be sorely needed before we escape from the depression. I am sorry the chairman of the committee would stand up in the House and say the so-called "George amendment", which is included in the conference report, is innocuous and will be of no avail. When he makes the statement he says, in effect, the President of the United States has prejudged the case of the textile people and will not take advantage of the power to lift the taxes from this prostrate industry. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Senator George] has given the one bright ray of hope to the textile industry in more than a year. Through both the action and the lack of action by the administration the textile industry, the second largest industry in this country, has been placed on the brink of despair and close to destruction. In one instance the industry has been loaded with taxes unjustly imposed, and then the administration has permitted Japanese imports to continue unchecked. As a consequence the industry is in dire distress.

Now we are told these millions of people who are seeking relief are not to be considered in a measure designed for relief. More relief would be given by lifting the processing tax from the textile industry than will be gained in spending the money in many of the fields to which it will be sent.

The Secretary of Agriculture has demonstrated, through his statements, he has no concern for the textile industry; that he is simply thinking of his own activity. He is not broad enough to give equal justice to all of the American people. He is entirely oblivious to the millions who are in dire distress because of his policies.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Secretary cannot see he is bringing back the cotton growers of the South to a civilization which will be based on a production of 6,000,000 bales of cotton. He cannot see the 750,000 small cotton growers he has forced on the public-welfare list. He does not see, and probably does not care, that 500,000 textile workers of this country are in danger of losing their jobs. He does not care, apparently, that whole communities in this great land of ours are being reduced to destitution and destruction.

He goes blindly on preaching his doctrine of scarcity in a world hungry for food and clothing. He is still for an experiment which has failed.

Now it is stated here the bright hope given a distressed industry by the efforts of Senator GEORGE will be of no avail. I cannot believe the President will be deaf to the calls of this sick industry. I cannot believe the chairman speaks with knowledge when he leaves this impression.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, our friends on the opposite side of the aisle ask us why we are asking that this bill be sent back to conference. There are none so blind as those who will not see and none so deaf as those who will not hear. The chairman of this committee told the House plainly and distinctly why it was deemed advisable to send this bill back to conference. The conferees on the part of the House insisted, of course, on the House provisions in the bill the way it passed the House. In the conference, necessarily, concessions had to be made and concessions were made on some provisions of the bill, especially on the provision which makes an allocation of $900,000,000 for loans and grants, on the condition that at least one-third of the aggregate in loans and grants should be for direct labor. We have since learned that the conference report in that regard will make the bill very difficult in administration. Now, we are met with the situation that loans or grants on the condition that one-third of the total be for direct labor excludes all labor that might be performed in fabricating plants in carrying out the general purposes of the bill for the relief of unemployment. If this were "labor, direct or indirect" this question would not arise. Now, the time to correct this in order to make the bill more practicable and more workable, is at the first opportunity and this is the first opportunity.

We are asking this House to send this bill back to conference that we may correct that one matter especially. Other corrections may be found advisable.

This is an unemployment and relief bill; we want to get the bill in shape to accomplish this purpose to the fullest extent. It is designed to bring relief to our unemployed, and in doing so fabricating industries and men engaged in fabricating plants are just as much entitled to assistance and funds from this bill as are men engaged directly at the site of operations. The Comptroller General has ruled that "direct labor" excludes labor in fabricating plants. To carry out the purpose of this bill and to accomplish what was originally intended, it should go back to conference in order that this matter may be corrected and that States, subdivisions, and agencies thereof as well as self-liquidating projects of public bodies created by States and municipalities, cities, and other public institutions to which loans and grants may be made may procure money for the benefit of labor generally as well as for direct labor at the site of operations. This is the purpose of the committee in asking this be returned, and the chairman of the committee explained the matter very fully. The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that now raise the question would have known, had they but listened, the purpose in sending this bill back to conference. Now, I call upon you, Democrats on this side of the aisle, to go along with us and send this bill back to conference that the real purpose of the bill may be made more effective and put in proper form. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, the objection is made to the present conference report that 33 1/3 percent of the funds loaned to subdivisions of government be spent for direct labor. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this is the estimate submitted by Admiral Peoples himself. No objection was made at the time of his testimony before the committee. If this is to be a work bill, to take people off the dole, certainly the money must be used in direct wages, and it is not unreasonable to put in restrictions insuring that of the money allotted, a fair share will go for direct labor. If you would like us to go along with you, you should explain why there should be objections to this 33 1/3 percent requirement.

Perhaps you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have information that we do not possess; perhaps you know what the program for the expenditure of this money is, but you certainly have not let us in on the information, if you have it.

Maybe if you would tell us what the works program is, and how the money is to be spent, we might know more about your objection to one-third of the money going for direct wages in the community in which it is allotted.

Why should not at least one-third of this money go for direct labor? If a substantial portion of the money is not spent in the local communities, then you will merely continue the process of draining the money off into a few financial and industrial centers. That is the very policy that brought about the collapse that resulted in the present depression.

The very thing we want to do is get this money into circulation in the various States and local communities. Wages are the best way to do it.

I am not concerned with the politics and partisanship involved, but I am amused when gentlemen on the other side say that we are blocking the President's program. As a matter of fact, no President of this country ever has had such complete cooperation from the minority as the present occupant of the White House; and no administration ever was so much blocked by purely partisan political obstructionist tactics as the past administration was by you gentlemen. Its program had no opportunity, because that administration could get no cooperation from your side of the aisle. As I say, I am not concerned with the political side; but I am concerned with the question of the right of the people to be represented in a legislative body. We are no longer a legislature; we have become a blind pig. Everything is being shoved through blindly; you are passing legislation without even giving us a chance to discuss it. Last year you put bills through without the Members even being permitted to see a copy of the bills before they were passed by the House. You put through major bills involving hundreds of millions of dollars in 10 minutes. Why, then, all this delay now, when people are in actual want and relief is in a critical condition?

[Here the gavel fell]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], who has just spoken, states we are passing legislation blindly. He should be reminded that we are now trying to prevent the House from doing what he condemns. The question now pending is the motion of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee to recommit this bill for further conference and not to pass it. It is not unusual for conferees to submit such a motion, and it shows an earnest purpose on the part of the conferees to correct any mistakes in the conference report before finally submitting it to the House.

The four House conferees representing the majority party, all of whom voted for the bill when it first passed the House, and without whose vote no conference report could have been brought back to the House, now unanimously ask that the conference report be recommitted and frankly tell you that this course is necessary in order to correct what they now believe are mistakes and would make it impossible for the bill to be efficiently administered. No pride of opinion prevents the majority conferees from making this frank statement to the House.

It is not my desire in the short time remaining to repeat arguments previously made, since this House does not enjoy superfluous talk. You have heard brief, convincing, and forceful statements by two of the majority House conferees giving some reasons why, in their judgment, the report should be recommitted. I wish to refer to another reason which, in my opinion, suggests that the report should be recommitted for further consideration, namely, the provision requiring confirmation by the Senate of certain administrative officials appointed by the President. It would, in my judgment, greatly delay the effectiveness of the bill primarily designed, if you please, to meet emergency needs.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, the Democratic conferees, the ones who signed this conference report, are all asking that it be recommitted.

Mr. OLIVER. Absolutely.

Mr. RANKIN. And if they had made a motion to agree to the conference report the gentlemen on the other side immediately would have opposed it.

Mr. OLIVER. I think so; and let me conclude with this statement: The conferees whom you appointed have given sufficient reasons, I believe, why our colleagues on the majority side should send this bill back to conference. I give you another reason, ad hominem, perhaps, but the shortness of the time allotted me does not permit more than brief mention of it. Two gentlemen on the minority side, whom I respect, and who are conferees, did not vote for this bill, when it originally passed the House; they did not sign the conference report; and they would not now vote for the conference report, if it was submitted to the House. When you find these two minority conferees, now so vigorously opposing the motion to recommit, I respectfully submit, it furnishes to our colleagues on the majority side a very good and cogent reason why the motion to recommit should be carried.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The two conferees on the minority side never voted to report the bill out of conference and are today opposed to sending it back to conference, yet, if they had their way, it would be in conference now.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I understand this is a unanimous report of the conferees, both of the Senate and of the House; but I have not yet understood why the report should be recommitted. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman was not in the Chamber when the matter was explained, and I have not time to repeat what has been said. I think the reasons given were sound. I can say to the gentleman from Kentucky, however, that it is not unusual for the Supreme Court, both of the Nation and of the several States, to recall announced opinions; nor is it unusual for our highest courts to grant rehearings and state their reasons afterward.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] to suspend the rules and recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—yeas 208, noes 74.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 110, not voting 64, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PUBLIC-UTILITIES HOLDING COMPANY BILL AND T. V. A.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the public-utility holding-company bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I wish to make a few preliminary remarks on the public-utility bill now before that committee.

Newton D. Baker once said that "the test of intelligence is a capacity to suspend judgment until the facts are known."

I would like the country to know that a group of level-headed and fair-minded men—the members of that committee—are trying to ascertain the facts. They are proceeding with patience and without passion. They are hearing every side of the question. The hearings have now been going on morning and afternoon for 5 weeks, and are by no means concluded.

Despite excited statements that the bill as first drafted would be "railroaded" through with only 12 hours for a $12,000,000,000 industry to present its case, the committee has already given the industry 48 hours, and still more time will be given. The defense has already consumed more time than the proponents of the bill.

This brief recital ought to reassure anxious investors that the case will be heard before it is judged, and that judgment will be the result of reason, not emotion. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is not a punitive body, on the one hand, nor the creature of the Power Trust on the other.

Its task is as delicate as that of the surgeon—to cut away cancerous tissue and leave unharmed the sources of life and growth. It has but one interest—the public interest. It has but one desire—to promote recovery and the confidence that underlies recovery.

It can build for the future, but it cannot salvage the past. Responsibility for the past rests on other shoulders.

If the key men in the industry in all cases had been industrial statesmen and not, as in some cases, Ponzi financiers, there would be no problem before the industry or Congress today.

An attempt will be made by some of the Ponzis of the industry to deposit their illegitimate offspring on the doorstep of Congress.

Congress did not cause the losses of the past and will not do vicarious atonement for them. Congress did not engage in "write-ups"; it did not capitalize imagination; it issued no watered stocks; it made no "upstream" loans; it did not "trade out" or induce old ladies to exchange sound securities in operating companies for "convertible, redeemable, re-funding second preferred, but nonvoting, junior warrants" in holding companies many degrees removed from the stone and steel and coal and falling water which lie at the bottom of the pyramid and alone sustain it.

On the other hand, Congress did not build the magnificent physical properties which today constitute the greatest of the miracles of science. Let the credit go where it belongs and the blame fall where it should.

To keep the record straight let me give these facts. They are taken from the testimony of Mr. David Friday, an economist engaged by the industry to appear before our committee. He states that the market value of utility securities on September 1, 1919, was: Holding companies, $4,444,709,029, and operating companies, $5,294,949,486, a total of $9,739,658,515. On July 1, 1932, values of holding-company securities had shrunk 87 percent and operating companies 79 percent. In other words, $9,739,658,515 had shrunk to $1,684,773,000, showing a market value loss of $8,054,885,000, or an average decline of 83 percent. No doubt the value in 1929 was too high and the value in 1932 was too low. Stocks formerly selling for $100 declined to $5 or less.

That staggering shrinkage in value cannot be blamed on Congress or the present administration or its policies or the pending bill. It occurred before anyone now holding office was elected.

Since the date last given there has been a further shrinkage in the value of public-utility securities. Since March 4, 1933, the present administration has been in power and Insull and others have been fighting to keep out of prison. I shall not attempt to further apportion the responsibility for any continuing loss of confidence in the value of these securities.

It is time for the leaders in Congress and the leaders in business to reestablish that lost confidence and to rebuild this great industry. Let us build it upon the rock of character, and not on the sands of cunning and greed. The light and power industry needs the light of publicity and the power of public opinion. The industry has nothing to fear from the public if it deals fairly with the public. I will play my last card on the sense of fairness of the American people.

I am satisfied, too, that many utilities were managed with as high a degree of honor as prevailed generally in the 1920's—even among politicians—and that their present management is entitled to confidence.

In the task of reconstruction I think government has its part to play. I refer now to the huge hydroelectric program begun with Boulder Dam in the Hoover administration and continuing with Muscle Shoals in the present administration.

I think the Government should make absolutely explicit the frontiers of that program. If more millions of dollars are to be advanced by private investors in the expansion of the light and power industry, if more machinery and equipment is to be bought, more men to be employed, more pay rolls to enter the homes of America, it seems to me imperative that private enterprise must know, with confidence, the limits of that program.

If private business is to be asked to play the game, it must be assured that it will still have a game to play. I would like to repeat that statement in letters a foot high and hang them on the wall of every office in Washington.

I make no criticism of the Tennessee Valley Authority as a "yardstick" to measure the cost of electrical energy. That yardstick has been voted by Congress and is not now the issue.

But the yardstick must be an honest one if it is to be a reliable measure of a competing service. Men have many virtues. A yardstick has only one—honesty. The Tennessee Valley yardstick must contain every item of cost that private enterprise has to include in its operating expense. I have no doubt that that is the intention of the management of the T. V. A. But that intention is not now made clear. It should be, in justice to T. V. A., to the communities it serves, and to the private enterprise with which it competes.

T. V. A. is excepted from the provisions of the pending bill. Private enterprise is included. Uniform accounting is to be required of private utilities but not of the Government utility. Private enterprise is to be subject to Federal regulation, as it is now subject to State regulation. T. V. A. asserts that it is subject to no regulation, State or Federal.

The good intentions of the high-minded men in charge of T. V. A. will not remove the present timidity of private capital. T. V. A. should be like Caesar's wife. Its record of business management should be written where those who run may read. It owes that to itself and to the Nation.

This is no time for hysteria or recrimination or suspicion. It is time when honest men in government and honest men in business should build confidence by an exchange of confidence.

Public office and public utilities should both be a public trust.

We must liquidate the faults of the past and solidify the foundations of the future.

The hope of tomorrow depends on the candor and courage and character with which we all attack the problems of today.

The yardstick of tomorrow must be the Golden Rule.

TRADE TREATIES

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview which I gave to the New York Times and which was published on yesterday, on Trade Pacts.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is it the gentleman wants to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. BACHARACH. I just stated it was an interview which I gave to the New York Times on trade pacts with foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. It is the gentleman's own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following interview which I gave to the New York Times, published on March 31, on Trade Treaties:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, Mar. 31, 1935]

BACHARACH WARNS ON TRADE TREATIES—ASSERTS RECIPROCAL PACTS AID FOREIGN FARMERS, BUT FAIL TO PROTECT GROWERS HERE—ASKS REPEAL OF THE ACT—SEES STATE INDUSTRIES HURT BY BELGIAN ACCORD—FEARS LINKS WITH ITALY AND JAPAN

(By ISAAC BACHARACH, Representative in Congress from the Second New Jersey Congressional District and Republican Member of the House Ways and Means Committee)

WASHINGTON, March 30.—In the last Congress we enacted, at the behest of the Roosevelt administration, what is known as the "Reciprocal Tariff Act." I was opposed to the enactment of this legislation and am still opposed to it. So far, under the terms of this act, the President has entered into trade agreements with Cuba and Belgium, but negotiations have begun with other nations, including Colombia, Haiti, Brazil, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, Finland, the Netherlands, Italy, and Canada.

Agreements with any and all of these countries vitally affect the State of New Jersey. With the exception of Belgium, agreement with the other countries above mentioned would affect principally our agricultural interests.

We already had a 20-percent differential in favor of Cuban products, but among other concessions made to Cuba under the trade agreement, we have made reductions of from 25 to 50 percent below previous existing tariff duties on lima beans, white potatoes, tomatoes, cucumbers, egg plant, peppers, squash, etc., in the seasonal period from December 1 through the spring months, a time when the domestic producers most need the protection that was afforded under our present tariff act.

TOMATO GROWERS TO SUFFER

Negotiations are under way for a trade agreement with Italy. If this agreement goes through, and I have no doubt on that score, the farmers of New Jersey and other Northeastern States will be materially affected. This is particularly true with relation to any agreement which would lower the tariff on tomatoes and tomato products. Any reduction in these tariff rates will be reflected immediately in lower prices to tomato growers. Even under the benefits of the present tariff law, which has reduced substantially imports of tomatoes and tomato products, producers are unable to sell their produce at a fair profit and they are asking the canners for a 10-percent increase in price. This will be voided if the canners are threatened with a surplus from other countries, and tomato brokers and jobbers are declining to buy tomatoes in view of the negotiations with Italy and the probability of a reduction in tariff rates.

As a result the market is stagnant, prices are depressed below the 1934 level and growers are facing higher production costs due to codes and the competition from higher labor wages in industry. Another thing which confronts the tomato growers of New Jersey and other Eastern States, is the fear of competition from Midwestern areas where much wheat and corn land has been removed from these crops under benefit payments, but are not held under any restrictions as to what crops can be produced thereon.

It is understood that the administration is in process of negotiating an agreement with Canada, with the possibility of a reduction in the tariff on Canadian potatoes, in accordance with the precedent established in the Cuban agreement. New Jersey is a great potato-growing State. Already potato growers of the country are suffering from foreign competition, which has ruined prices and subjected them to a tremendous financial loss. To help them there should probably be an increase in tariff rates instead of a reduction. This is true also of the poultry and egg industry, which is suffering from ruinous competition from China and other foreign countries.

THE BELGIAN AGREEMENT

Industrial New Jersey will be very much affected by the agreement entered into with Belgium. Under that agreement 54 products were affected, and of these 54 products on which concessions were granted, reductions in rates of duty were made on 48, the present duty was bound on 1, and 5 products were bound on the free list.

The 48 products on which reductions were made include 8 chemicals; 7 ceramics, including cement, glass, sand, laminated, plate, rolled, cylinder, crown, and sheet glass; 10 iron and steel products; 3 agricultural products; 8 textiles; 5 paper products; and 7 sundries. The reductions on tariff rates on these products range from 17 percent to 50 percent.

The State of New Jersey will feel the effects of this trade agreement with Belgium, since all of the products on which tariff duties have been reduced under the agreement are produced in our State.

So far as I know, negotiations have not been undertaken yet with Japan looking toward a trade agreement with that country, but, should such a calamity develop—for it would be nothing short of a calamity—it would spell ruin for American industry and the welfare of American workers.

To my mind it is evident that in entering into these trade agreements we are more concerned with the prosperity and welfare of foreign farmers and workers and foreign manufacturers than we are with the welfare of our own farmers, workers, and manufacturers, and I fail to see how we are going to cure unemployment, increase wages, and do the other things so vitally necessary to pull us out of the depression if we are to throw wide open the doors of foreign competition and thereby tear down our tariff walls through these vicious trade agreements.

The law should be repealed before it is too late.

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. PITTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 366.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues have read my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 28 on page 4644, and also in the RECORD for March 29, on page 4717, in which I discuss H. R. 3662 and point out the objections to the measure are without merit because the courts held the Government liable. The Government, then, in violation of law, forced the claimants to take a percentage of the loss as determined by the Government or else take nothing. This bill has for its purpose the payment to the claimants of the balance of the loss admitted by the Government.

Those who do not understand the bill, and therefore oppose it, say something like this, "Oh, this is an old claim, hoary with age, has been here a long time", and so forth. I want to correct this error. Following the 1918 fire, the Director General of Railroads denied liability for the loss, claimed other fires did the damage, and so forth, and entered into litigation which covered a period of years. In order to force everybody to take what the Director General would pay, he refused to pay anyone a portion of the loss until all would agree to accept a portion of the loss. This disgraceful procedure took time. When the citizens of a great Republic were given no other alternative than to sign on the dotted line, it took considerable time to settle the thousands of claims which had been filed. The last cases were not actually settled until 1927 or 1928. In 1929, in the "lame duck" session, the first bill was introduced in Congress by my predecessor. I took office on March 4, 1929, and at the regular December session that year I introduced a bill for the fire claimants. In March 1930 Ed. M. Erwin, Chairman of the Claims Committee, appointed a subcommittee to conduct hearings. These hearings were held. They extended over a period of several days and contained over 300 pages of testimony and evidence. The former Director General of Railroads appeared in opposition to the claims. This took several months, and Congress adjourned in 1930 with the bill still pending before the committee. At the third session of the Seventy-first Congress consideration of the bill was again had, and on February 17, 1931, Hon. Fred Johnson, of Nebraska, submitted a favorable report to the House. The bill was not reached on the Private Calendar. The bill was again favorably reported in the Seventy-second Congress, and one objection prevented its consideration. It passed the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress. I cite these facts to show that there has been proper diligence, and the bill is not "hoary with age", but has been properly before Congress, where action could not be obtained under the old rules of procedure, where one objection can stop a bill, no matter how meritorious.

Congressman Johnson of Nebraska, in his report in 1931, said, in part:

The testimony developed in the hearings on this case is uncontroverted as to the situation which resulted in part payment of the losses suffered by the fire claimants. The testimony leads to the conclusion that the fire sufferers were practically forced to accept such payments as the Director General of Railroads was willing to make. When he made those part payments it is true that the fire sufferers had no other alternative except to comply with his pronouncements. He required that a legal release of all claims against the Government be executed; he required that a legal stipulation for the entry of judgment be executed; he required that a legal satisfaction of judgment be signed and executed. He took all of these steps so as to forever bar any claimant from having any legal or equitable causes of action against the United States in any of its courts. The only redress, therefore, which the claimants in this bill have is a bill in Congress.

The Government is still indebted to them, in spite of these legal instruments, for the balance of a loss which was ascertained by the Government, on a liability that was established by the courts of Minnesota, and on which only partial payment has been made.

The United States insists that its citizens discharge their duties and obligations fully. In collecting income taxes, it does not accept a percentage of the amount due. The Government should, therefore, recognize its just obligations and, through Congress, ought to treat fairly with its citizens. Either the Government owed the fire sufferers the amount of loss which each of them sustained or else it owed them nothing. It recognized liability in making part payments on these claims. The only way that justice can be done is to pass this bill and pay the balance.

The above language is that of the Committee on Claims in 1931, and was the deliberate judgment of the committee after hearing witnesses and obtaining information as to the fire claims. The members of the Claims Committee were men of high standing. They would not, and did not, submit a report that was not correct and proper. When this claim was considered in the Senate last session, the same results were reached. Surely, those of us who are interested in this measure have proved the justice of these claims. It is unfair for one or two or three men, who did not hear the testimony, or consider it, and who cannot without long and careful study, know the facts, attempt to speak with authority on this measure, or successfully oppose its passage.

Read report no. 255, and note carefully Senator LOGAN's report in the Seventy-third Congress, incorporated therein.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO W. W. HOWES

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, a majority of the Congressmen come in contact frequently with our genial, accommodating First Assistant Postmaster General, W. W. Howes, and will verify my assertion that no man has ever occupied this important office who has been more conscientious, faithful, and efficient.

As a South Dakotan, I am especially proud of "Bill" Howes, and so are the people of my State in general, for he is one of us—a resident of Wolsey, a former State's attorney for Beadle County, and for years one of the most stalwart leaders of the Democracy of the State. Mr. Howes is still a comparatively young man, yet it is acknowledged by all who know him that he performs the multifarious and detailed duties of his difficult position with rare devotion as well as exceptional tact.

Back when the Democratic Party of South Dakota was in a hopeless minority, Mr. Howes was just as dependable and unwavering a Democrat as he is today. In the days when it seemed that no Democrat had a chance of winning an election, he fought battle after battle as cheerfully and energetically as though victory had been in sight. The years went on and his long and tireless efforts were crowned with success. No Democrat in the country had more right to rejoice over the final triumph than Mr. Howes. I campaigned with him, and I know how splendidly he gave his time and talents to the Democratic cause when defeat was a certainty.

Unlike some men in high office, Mr. Howes' promotion came as the reward of hard work and real service. For him there is no hour limit. He customarily works overtime. Early and late, day and night, he is at his office. It is no simple task to have the responsibility to greater or lesser extent for 48,000 postmasterships. After the Civil Service Commission has certified the names of the three eligibles for a postmastership, the recommendation of the Congressman or the local party organization of the one to be named goes to Mr. Howes for consideration and check-up before it is finally passed on to the Postmaster General. The immense amount of detail work involved may be realized in part, but it is far greater than can easily be realized.

Mr. Howes is a credit to the Nation, to his home State, to his party, and to himself. He is not only an able and painstaking official but he has steadily demonstrated that it is possible for a public servant to be kindly, thoughtful, considerate, and friendly. His friends are legion—as they ought to be—and they include almost as many Republicans as Democrats.

It is a pleasure to turn from ordinary routine of congressional duties and say a few well-merited words in behalf of Mr. Howes. It is my thought that it would not be out of place to make this a matter of record so that proper credit might be given such a splendid example of the best citizenship of governmental efficiency.

PREVENTION OF WAR

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House who is both sincere in conviction on the subject and pledged to exert every possible effort to allay the hazards of war, I would like to consume this time so graciously accorded me in outlining a few aspects of the war problem which, I believe, have not yet been extensively examined in the course of current discussions.

While it is generally agreed that war should be abolished, and while sober thinkers realize that there is little possibility that any nation of the world not under the control of madmen would attempt armed invasion of another in the near future, it is too much to hope that another terrible world conflict is not inevitable. No. Of course, we do not want war—but we cannot help but recall the post-war remark of that war-time English statesman, Lloyd George, who said:

No country really wanted war in 1914, but we gradually slid into it.

No country really wants war today, but once the conflagration starts and patriotism is fired up with martial music and propaganda, the demands of the mass of people will be such that sober reflection and calm judgment will be forced to give way to the feverish desire to annihilate the enemy. War is inevitable; even with all of its gruesome aspects, its vile frightfulness and brutality forever engraved on the minds of those who participated in the last one; with the horrors of human conflict, murderous and fatal, dimmed by a few intervening years, those who yesterday swore they would never again bear arms will be among the first to come forward to fight to the tune of "save democracy" or "down with tyrants" or another catch phrase of like ring.

Why is war inevitable?

While the answer to this question may easily be complicated by examination of historical precedent, it finally narrows down to the bare fact that the cause of war is economic, and as long as the ambitions of men direct them toward progress in trade and commerce, just so long will the desires of the nationals of one land conflict with those of another and ultimately lead to inhuman warfare among humans. The inception of war is motivated by the desire for human gain, in the first instance, and is always followed by a synthetic patriotism, fostered and nurtured into the actual and necessary patriotic fervor which is the prerequisite of the murder and suicide of war. This we well know. We also know that when war is imminent these facts are obscured as reason vanishes in the face of blind unreason.

Even in peace time we appear to find it difficult to get together on methods of minimizing war hazards. I quote a brief item entitled, "How to Abolish War Profits", taken from a recent issue of the United States News:

Three clashing viewpoints on taking the profits out of war, as set forth in House committee hearings on the McSwain bill:

For the veterans: "Freeze prices, equalize the recompense of workers and soldiers, license business, combat any strike of capital by martial law, seize all war profits."

For organized labor: No conscription of labor; no freezing of prices, which would enrich employers as volume of production mounts.

For steel manufacturers: Abolish war.

The bills provisions, in line with recommendations of anti-profiters Hugh S. Johnson and Bernard M. Baruch: Conscription of men between the ages of 21 and 30; Presidential power to fix prices, license business, determine priority for filling orders. Fine for violations, $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the McSwain bill to be an excellent measure. It is properly termed "a declaration of policy" and should become a powerful factor in preventing this country from going into war against another nation. I shall certainly vote for its adoption. I also am heartily in accord with the use of the taxing power of the Congress to eliminate any possibility that another world war will again produce in this country 21,000 new millionaires and give some 69,000 men an opportunity to divide war profits of $3,000,000,000, over and above normal profits, as was the case in the last war.

However, the McSwain bill and similar measures, although designed to help prevent war, cannot be regarded as more than one more step in the right direction, even if an extremely important one. After its adoption we must continue to cast about for other means of assuring world peace. We must carry on the good work of encouraging and executing peace pacts and nonaggression treaties, so that when the militaristic influences of the few countries which might feel compelled to fight over some real or imagined grievance would find few allies to join them.

The McSwain bill and the proposed taxing of war profits are, of course, based upon and justified by the idea that it is the duty of the individual citizen of the United States to abide by laws enacted by chosen representatives who, in effect, have a mandate from the people as a whole, demanding, among other things, that they—the representatives—make every possible effort to allay the possibilities of war.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if this particular mandate is not of sufficient importance to justify extraordinary measures of control. Should we not take every step possible in an effort to bring about the ultimate elimination of this uncivilized legal murder of human beings? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative—and I am confident that it will be—I propose that the Congress of the United States inform every citizen of this country that it shall be the duty of that citizen to not only subject himself to such rules of law as will prevent this country from going to war, but shall also refuse to profit by warfare between nations or within nations anywhere in the world. In other words, let us not only avoid such entanglements as a nation, but let us also discourage our citizens from participating, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of foreign nations at war.

The plan I propose is simple in conception, although admittedly complex as to execution. Through the power of Congress to tax incomes, I would impose a levy of 100 percent upon profits accruing to an American citizen from within any nation which happened to be in a state of war at the time such profits existed. This tax should apply with equal force whether the income entered the United States or remained on deposit abroad, and penalties for avoidance should be sufficiently stringent to compel compliance.

I am aware that such a law would cause a small reduction in our foreign trade from time to time, resulting in benefits for other countries, but if the nations of the world desire peace they will adopt similar laws. As a family of nations we talk, talk, and talk, and then talk some more about limiting armaments. We negotiate peace treaties. We send good-will ambassadors across international boundaries to cultivate friendship and understanding.

All of these moves are excellent and indispensable. But, if we know that war is primarily an economic problem why use half-measures in its prevention? Why not attack it in the same manner we go after other economic sore spots in our existence, by striking at the basic cause of the whole sorry mess—the desire for human gain.

What better method could be used to test the sincerity of all nations than to propose a treaty which would arbitrarily end profits for noncombatants, both as nations and individuals?

It is because I believe that this proposal should first be presented in the form of a treaty for legislative consideration that I have not drafted a measure along these lines. Also, I am as yet not sure as to the constitutionality of the taxing method proposed and shall require further time for study. If, however, an amendment to the Constitution is found necessary, I am sure the people of this country would vote almost unanimously in favor of its inclusion.

The proposal should be discussed from all angles before any definite plan is crystallized. It is with this thought in mind that I commend it to your consideration.

PROTECTION AGAINST SOIL EROSION

Mr. WHELCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHELCHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this occasion to voice my whole-hearted endorsement of the measure before the House today, H. R. 7054, the purpose of this bill being "to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion and the making of this project a permanent measure."

The bill itself is very explicit, and the information contained in its provisions set out fully the purposes, and I ask consent that said bill be included herein and made a part of my remarks.

A bill to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage of soil and moisture resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands of the Nation, resulting from soil erosion, is a menace to the national welfare and that it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide for the control and prevention of soil erosion and thereby to preserve natural resources, control floods, prevent impairment of reservoirs, and maintain the navigability of rivers and harbors, protect public lands, and relieve unemployment, and the Secretary of Agriculture, from now on, shall coordinate and direct all activities with relation to soil erosion and in order to effectuate this policy is hereby authorized, from time to time—

(1) To conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the character of soil erosion and the preventive measures needed, to publish the results of any such surveys, investigations, or research, to disseminate information concerning such methods, and to conduct demonstrational projects in areas subject to erosion by wind or water;

(2) To carry out preventive measures, including, but not limited to, engineering operations, methods of cultivation, the growing of vegetation, and changes in use of land;

(3) To cooperate or enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial or other aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, or any person, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary, for the purposes of this act; and

(4) To acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, by purchase, gift, condemnation, or otherwise, whenever necessary for the purposes of this act.

Sec. 2. The acts authorized in section 1 (1) and (2) may be performed—

(a) On lands owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, with the cooperation of the agency having jurisdiction thereof; and

(b) On any other lands, upon obtaining proper consent or the necessary rights or interests in such lands.

Sec. 3. As a condition to the extending of any benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment and enforcement of local laws imposing suitable permanent restrictions on the use of such lands and otherwise providing for the prevention of soil erosion;

(2) Agreements and/or covenants as to the permanent use of such lands; and/or

(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise, to any operations conferring such benefits.

Sec. 4. For the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary, except that employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion may be continued without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act for a period not to exceed 4 months from the date of this enactment; and any persons with technical and expert knowledge, connected with any educational or research institution, may be jointly employed and compensated under this act and by such institution on a basis to be determined by the Civil Service Commission; and

(3) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and perform such acts, and prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act; and any violation of any such regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100.

Sec. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an agency to exercise the powers conferred on him by this act and may utilize the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, together with such personnel thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, and all unexpended balances of funds heretofore allotted to said organization which shall be available until June 30, 1937, and shall assume all obligations incurred by said organization prior to transfer to the Department of Agriculture. Funds provided in House Joint Resolution 117, "An act making appropriation for relief purposes" (for soil erosion) shall be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act; and in order that there may be proper coordination of erosion-control activities the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the agency created under this act such functions, funds, personnel, and property of other agencies in the Department of Agriculture as he may from time to time determine.

Sec. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

It is not my purpose, and in no wise do I attempt to discount the legislation being enacted by this Congress, but I do want to take this opportunity of saying, to my mind, the work being done, and that anticipated in regard to the erosion of our soil is of vast importance, and its value is inestimable to our Nation.

Never in the history of our country have the American people faced a situation so appalling, and unless something is done to check this waste, the fertility of our soil will be so depleted that from the standpoint of agriculture and earning a living from the soil it will be a thing of the past. May I say to you that there is in the approximate of 100,000 acres of land being laid in waste by this evil of soil erosion each year.

Of course, I can understand the damage in this connection. It is occasioned by winds in the Western States, but, in my opinion, this evil is doing its deadly work more where watersheds are in evidence than any other place. The fact is, the damage caused by wind erosion is small compared to the land made useless by water, and this is particularly so in north Georgia, and the whole piedmont belt. The fields which were fertile only a few years ago are today ravines and could be truthfully termed "waste lands."

Each year there has been carried from acres of this section many tons of fertile soil that it has taken years to place there by nature and the efforts of man and which is so valuable and means so much to the inhabitants of our country.

There is another evil to this situation, which is predominating in Georgia, and that is where the soil is washed from the lands in the northern portion of our State and these acres left bare. This same soil is being deposited in streams lower down in the State, and it is fast filling the beds of these streams, which causes the water to overflow its banks, and where there were once thousands of acres of fertile lowlands, today they are worthless swamps, made so by seepage from the streams that have been filled by this soil, and you can see from this that, not only is it causing the land in the northern portion of the State to be worthless but it is working such damage to the lowlands that they are becoming untenable and worthless, also, and from this explanation you can see that this soil erosion in Georgia has a two-fold evil.

Much has been said, and justly so, in tribute of two men, Hon. H. H. Bennett and Hon. Samuel W. Phillips, who, it is contended, have been instrumental in furtherance of soil erosion in the United States. I would not detract from this praise given these gentlemen, but may I call your attention to the untiring efforts of Hon. Loy E. Rast, regional director of this project, of Athens, Ga.?

It was through this gentleman that I became interested in soil erosion and to really see its value. On every occasion Mr. Rast presented this evil to the people, and, to my mind, he is outstanding in this work and too much cannot be said in his behalf, and I think it is nothing but fair that mention should be made of the splendid results he has attained in Georgia. The people feel that they have, in this gentleman, one whose interest is their interest, in this pioneering soil-erosion project.

In conclusion, may I say that in my opinion this is one of the most important measures presented to Congress, certainly since my stay here, and one that should receive the unqualified support of every American.

REFERENCE OF BILL

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the transfer of bills from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, one bill was overlooked. I therefore ask unanimous consent that H. R. 6119 be referred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

IDENTITIES OF INTEREST IN RESTORING FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech made by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, on World Trade. It is a good speech.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is impossible for the Members of the House to hear what these requests are.

Mr. MAVERICK. I asked unanimous consent to print a speech made by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace on the subject of World Trade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in the series of radio broadcasts on world trade and recovery, Washington, D. C., March 30, 1935:

We are now in the seventeenth year since the close of the Great War. Throughout these years people of vision in every country have sought to persuade their countrymen along paths that would lead them out of the wilderness of hatred, chaos, and despair into the promised land of a new world order. Undaunted by reverses and disappointments on all sides, these practical idealists have fought on for policies founded on a spirit of peaceful cooperation between nations.

Yet from the first they have struggled against terrific odds. Instead of unity of purpose and breadth of understanding, so essential to restoring the world to economic health, the spirit of hatred, suspicion, and of intense and narrow nationalism engendered by war remained predominant. Finally in 1929 the whole world economic fabric gave way under the cumulative impact of nationalistic policies. In the severe world depression that has followed, nation after nation has sought refuge in measures of economic exclusion, whose only effect has been to intensify the very disease with which all are afflicted.

The story of our own contribution to the development of this world malady is one upon which I need not dwell. We raised our tariffs higher and higher in amazing disregard of the fact that we had become a great creditor country and one still heavily dependent upon export trade. When we should have lowered our tariffs, we raised them; when we should have accepted more imports, we shut the door against them; when we loaned vast sums abroad, we refused to let our debtors pay us back in the only way they could—in goods.

It is a discouraging fact that we have not yet learned how a mature creditor nation must behave. Five years of depression have not convinced us, apparently, that there is any relationship between foreign trade and national welfare. Individuals, industries, even whole localities and regions whose very life depends upon the restoration of foreign trade, have thus far failed to grasp the true realities of the situation. If they do not become aware of their true interests, the contest will go by default, and it will go 100 percent against them.

Let me begin by reminding you of what has actually taken place with respect to world trade and our own share in it. In 1929 the gold value of the foreign commerce of the world aggregated $69,000,000,000. By 1933 it had declined to twenty-four billion, and in 1934 was probably not far from that figure. Thus, in value, world trade has fallen to but a third of its 1929 level. In actual quantity the decline has been much less than this, because for many commodities entering into world trade the effects of the depression and of trade barriers have been felt primarily in lower prices rather than reduced volume of shipments. Nevertheless, the actual quantity of goods moving in international trade had by 1933 declined to about three-fourths of what it was in 1929, and is still probably not far from that figure.

Our own foreign trade has fared even worse. In value it declined from a little less than $10,000,000,000 in 1929 to less than $4,000,000,000 in 1934, in United States dollars, but to about $2,500,000,000 if figured on the old gold basis. In terms of quantity it amounted in 1934 to only 60 percent of the 1929 volume. What has happened is that we have not only suffered a trade loss since 1929 aggregating in value something like $30,000,000,000, but have also been securing a progressively smaller share of the reduced world trade. Indeed, our share of the world's trade has declined more than that of almost every other country. In 1929 we obtained 13.8 percent of the total world trade. By 1934 our share had fallen to 9.8 percent. Thus our share relative to that of the other countries actually fell by nearly 30 percent. What this means is that a considerable part of our trade loss represents actual diversion of trade to other countries. It will not be easy to recapture.

Foreign trade means bread and butter to millions of people in this country. Relatively few of them seem to realize it. The cotton farmer may know very well that perhaps half his production will be sold abroad, but the railroad employee may not give much thought to the fact that he derives part of his earnings from moving these export and import products. That part of the cargo from our farms, factories, mines, and forests which enters into export trade must move by rail or truck or steamer to one of our port cities and in moving creates employment for thousands of people engaged in transportation, and for the people engaged in manufacture of transportation equipment, in producing coal or oil, or in selling merchandise to the workers. About 10 percent of the workers of this country are in the transportation and communication business. Moreover, it must be remembered that such cargo, after arrival at the port, furnishes livelihood for clerks in export houses, for stevedores, insurance men and brokers, bankers, sailors, and all the other people dependent on shipping. The same can be said of imports. What all this means to our port cities and to transportation agencies, among others, is regularly ignored.

Consider, for example, what has happened with respect to the volume of goods moving through some of our leading port cities. Take New York City. In the year ended June 30, 1929, nearly 29,000,000 tons of goods moved through the port of New York. By 1933 the total had declined to 12,700,000 tons, and though it increased to 15,500,000 tons in 1934, it was still scarcely more than half the 1929 figure.

Philadelphia's foreign trade fell from 6,500,000 tons in 1929 to less than 4,000,000 tons by 1933. Baltimore fared still worse, for its foreign commerce fell from 6,400,000 tons to a little over 2,000,000 tons in the same period. Boston's trade was more than cut in half by 1933, while New Orleans and the minor Louisiana ports saw their commerce fall from 10,400,000 tons to 3,500,000, or little more than one-third the 1929 figure. The California ports suffered less, but their tonnage fell from 10,500,000 long tons in 1929 to 6,900,000 tons in 1933, and the ports of Washington State found tonnage dropping from 4,000,000 tons down to 1,700,000.

The past year has seen some recovery in volume, but our foreign trade is still only 60 percent of the predepression tonnage, and distress in the port cities is still very great. Baltimore has 16.4 percent of its families on relief. New York has 19.4 percent, San Francisco 20 percent, Boston 24 percent, and New Orleans 25.4 percent. Of course, it is not to be supposed that more than a part of these families come from the group normally obtaining its livelihood directly from foreign trade. Yet who will question what a godsend it would be to these port cities if trade were restored.

There would be increased work for thousands of sailors and stevedores, for laborers in repair plants and shipbuilding yards, for clerks in shipping offices, bankers, and trading firms, for truckmen now out of work by the thousands, for railroad employees, and for the much larger number of people who live by selling supplies directly or indirectly to people engaged in foreign trade.

Consider further what the decline of foreign trade has meant to ocean shipping in terms of idle tonnage and of empty cargo space in vessels under operation. Despite the decline of about 25 percent in the volume of international trade since 1929, world tonnage of vessels of 100 gross tons or over (which would include coastwise shipping) has declined by only about 5 percent. Between January 1, 1930, and January 1, 1933, idle tonnage of vessels of 100 gross tons or over more than quadrupled, increasing three and one-tenth million to twelve and seven-tenths million tons. Our own idle tonnage increased from 2,000,000 to three and five-tenths million. Since that time normal retirement and subsidized scrapping of tonnage in other countries have cut the idle world tonnage to a little more than double what it was in 1930.

Although on January 1, 1934, the volume of world sea-borne trade was less than in 1913, the carrying capacity of ocean shipping was 75 percent greater than in 1913. Although freight earnings per ton of cargo were no higher than in 1913, the expenses of ship operation were estimated to be 40 percent higher. The freight losses to shipping engaged in American foreign trade since 1929 are reflected in the decline of 40 percent in tonnage transported and in an aggregate loss of some 174,000,000 tons that would have been carried during 1930-34 if there had been no recession of trade after 1929.

Now consider what the decline in our foreign trade has meant to the railroads. Apparently no detailed study of this sort has ever been made. We can get some idea of the magnitude of the loss, however, by referring to two specific cases for which it has been possible to work out rough estimates. The first includes automobiles, trucks, and automobile parts. On this item alone it is estimated that the decline in exports has resulted in an aggregate loss of revenue to the railroads for the 5-year period 1930-34, inclusive, running in the neighborhood of $70,000,000. The other item is wheat and flour. From the decline in this item the loss of revenue to the railroads during the same 5-year period appears to have been in the neighborhood of $80,000,000.

For some items the decline in actual volume shipped for export has not been great. This was notably true, until recently, in the important case of cotton. However, on the basis of very rough calculations, I am inclined to think that the aggregate loss of revenue to the railroads from the decline of our entire foreign trade during the period since 1929 would amount to at least a billion dollars and probably nearer a billion and a half.

Finally, there are the producers of the things that we export. They are, of course, the most important of the groups adversely affected by the trade decline. The prosperity of our export industries, including those branches of agriculture which normally export a large part of their output, is of the greatest importance to the welfare of the country. In 1929 such industries employed over 7,000,000 workers out of a total of less than 50,000,000 persons gainfully employed in the United States. It is estimated that no less than two and one-half million persons were engaged in producing goods for export. If one includes the families of such persons, this means that some ten millions of our population were directly dependent for their livelihood upon production for export.

Moreover, these workers were in large measure concentrated in certain industries and areas. As a result, the decline in exports has tended to disrupt business much more than it would if this labor and capital had been more generally distributed throughout the country. This is particularly true in the case of agriculture. The 2,000,000 cotton farmers sell more than half of their crop abroad. Forty percent of our tobacco is exported, nearly half of our dried fruit, and about a quarter of our canned fruit. In 1929 a third of our lard went abroad, but restrictions imposed by foreign countries cut this down to quarter by 1933. About two-thirds of the gum rosin produced in this country is exported and more than half of our gum turpentine, as well as large proportions of a multitude of other products of the farm and forest.

Our great manufacturing industries for the most part have not been so dependent upon foreign trade as the farmers raising export crops, but their stake is much larger than is commonly supposed. Approximately 15 percent of all industrial machinery is exported and a quarter of the agricultural implements. From 5 to 10 percent of our automobiles are exported. Forty percent or so of our refined copper is sent abroad as well as a substantial part of a vast number of other industrial products. It is hardly necessary to enumerate the long list of manufactured and mineral products which we export, or were exporting before the depression.

The loss of export markets has been a severe blow to branches of agriculture and industry, such as those that I have just mentioned, which have built up their plant to provide for both the domestic and foreign demand. In many cases exports have declined to a fraction of the former figure. Although exports in 1934, because of improved economic conditions and devaluation of the dollar, were somewhat greater than in the previous year, the volume was nevertheless pitifully small.

The loss to the country from this shrinkage of foreign trade has been far greater, I repeat, than most of our people even faintly suspect. In no small degree it has been responsible for the depth and length to which the depression has extended. Yet the fundamental cause of the decline in exports still persists. We are not importing enough goods to enable our foreign customers to buy more from us.

The volume of our exports depends upon the volume of goods which this country will accept in payment. The nature of our international transactions is such that our only hope of increasing exports again is to increase imports even more. Indeed, I will go further and say that in order to maintain even our present level of exports this country must import more goods and services from abroad.

During the past year the deficiency of imports was made up with gold. Few foreign countries can part with much more without undermining the bases of their currencies. Not only are we faced, therefore, with the possibility of a continuation of exports at the present low level, but we are in real and immediate danger of a still further recession unless steps are taken to make possible greater imports from abroad.

Nevertheless, the simple fact that if we are to have any exports we must have imports gets only lip service throughout the country. Minority groups, among whom tariff-protected groups are plentiful, clamor as of old for special favors enabling them to grab a larger share of the national income. Of 177 bills or resolutions involving foreign trade introduced into Congress up to the 1st of March, only 5 seemed designed to increase imports, while 56 were designed to restrict them even further.

This pressure of interested groups for still further restrictions upon imports, though discouraging in present circumstances, is not surprising. It is, after all, an old story. It has, however, been something of a surprise to me to find advocates of continued, or even more severe, trade restriction among some impartial students whose intellectual integrity cannot be doubted. Some of them take the view that this country should maintain barriers sufficiently high to exclude everything that can be produced in this country. Others seem to feel that we should not permit imports of goods which can be produced efficiently in the United States; but in failing to define what they mean by efficiency, they leave us in great doubt as to what goods would in fact be permitted to get in.

We can, of course, exclude all goods even remotely competitive. The trend of opinion seems to be in that direction. There is still, as I reckon it, about a third of our import trade that might conceivably be called "competitive" if we stretched the word "competitive" to include everything that our domestic industries contend is competitive. Some would even go further and say that bananas compete with apples, or coffee with milk and soft drinks.

But if we refuse to import more goods, or insist upon still further elimination of imports, we ought at least to be prepared to face the consequences. We must be prepared for economic and social readjustments of the most far-reaching kind. In agriculture alone, as I have repeatedly pointed out, we would have to make permanent the retirement of from 40 to 100 million acres of crop land. We would be faced with the necessity of a regimentation of our economic life and of our activities in general compared with which such measures as the Agricultural Adjustment Act would seem quite insignificant. This, as I have often stated, is not the course that I would prefer. The pain of adjustment would be less, I think, if we took a planned middle course; one which might perhaps call for imports of an additional half billion dollars' worth of goods annually, and for the permanent withdrawal of either 25,000,000 acres of good farm land or an equivalent amount of poor farm land.

In order to follow such a course we shall have to reduce our tariff. Against great obstacles we are now endeavoring to do this. Under authority of the trade agreements act, passed last year, we are negotiating trade agreements with foreign countries providing for reciprocal trade concessions. Progress thus far has been retarded by a number of factors: Delays involved in organizing the program; new problems of trade negotiation arising from the complex character of present-day trade restrictions; and the many obstacles always inherent in any attempt to reduce trade barriers. Nevertheless, progress has been made. Agreements have been negotiated with Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, and Haiti, and are in process of negotiation with a large number of others. Of the four that have been negotiated, only one—that with Cuba—has gone into effect.

Our experience under the Cuban agreement has been illuminating. I will not burden you with the long list of concessions made by Cuba on both agricultural and manufactured products. Two items will do for illustration, namely, lard and automobiles.

On lard the duty was cut from the prohibitive rate of 9.6 cents a pound to 2.3 cents; in other words, to about a fourth its previous level. Moreover, during the second year of the agreement, the duty will be further reduced to 1.9 cents a pound, and during the third year, to 1.5 cents—less than a sixth of the old rate.

Until she began imposing prohibitive duties, Cuba had long been one of our most important outlets for lard. Already, our lard exports to Cuba have shown a marked response to the duty cut, and this has been in spite of the sharp rise in domestic lard prices in recent months. For the year 1934 our shipments to Cuba were well over twice the amount shipped in 1933, although the new rates did not go into effect until late in August. During the last 4 months of the year our shipments were nearly three times what they had been during the last 4 months of 1933. During the first 2 months of the present year, though our total exports of lard to all countries were only a little more than a third of what they were last year, our shipments to Cuba were about three times the amount shipped last year. These are most encouraging indications that under reasonably normal conditions Cuba will again become a major export outlet for American lard.

On automobiles the duties were cut by about a half on the lower-priced cars and about a third on the medium-priced. For the entire year 1934 shipments to Cuba were almost three times those in 1933. During the 4 months following the signing of the agreement they were nearly 9 times what they had been during the same period of 1933. During the first 2 months of this year they were 10 times the quantity shipped during the same months last year.

The trade-agreements program has been achieving real results, but it has been doing so without anything like the body of public support that must come if the possibilities of the program are to be fully realized. While its enemies have been hard at work, most of its friends have been asleep. Without an aroused and intelligent public opinion in support of trade agreements they cannot continue.

This means, first of all, that there must be a clear understanding of what the restoration of our foreign trade will mean to our people and, conversely, what the failure to restore it will mean to them. If, in the light of these alternatives, they choose a policy of trade rather than economic isolation, they must then be prepared to take the steps that are necessary in order to restore trade. This means that they will have to do more than lip service to the axiom that it is necessary to buy in order to sell. They will have to begin opposing, instead of proposing, measures of trade exclusion. They will have to get squarely behind the trade-agreements program and every other sound measure for the restoration of trade.

Particularly is it appropriate that I should stress the interest of agriculture in this matter. There are a few groups of producers in agriculture who derive immediate benefits from duties on their products. But throughout almost our entire history the bulk of our farmers have been engaged in producing things the prices of which are determined in world markets, but they have bought their necessities in the protected domestic market. In short, most of them have been buying in a protected market and selling in a free market. Through recent adjustment measures of a stop-gap character this balance against the farmers has been partly redressed. Fundamentally, however, our agriculture is still organized to produce vast surpluses for export. For the majority of farmers, therefore, a revival of our foreign trade will bring direct and important gains. For all of them, I am inclined to think, it will ultimately bring large benefits, for it must be remembered that those farmers who are not on the export market themselves will be materially affected by producers whose export market is denied them. I hope that the true identity of interest that exists between the farmer and the transportation worker, between the interior and the seaboard, can be discovered and put to work before it is too late.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this is going to be on the controversy raging between himself and the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. This has nothing to do with any previous remarks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have been endeavoring to draw these requests to a close.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the day we take up the Consent Calendar. A considerable amount of time has been taken up, and if these speeches are going to continue, we will not be able to reach the Consent Calendar at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only requested 5 minutes. Will the gentleman from Virginia suggest when time may be secured?

Mr. BLAND. It may be secured on any appropriation bill. There are appropriation bills coming on later.

Mr. TREADWAY. In a week or two hence.

Mr. McFARLANE demanded the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I will not object to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], but I shall object to any more unanimous-consent requests along that line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

STATUE TO GEN. ROBERT E. LEE AT ARLINGTON, VA.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the time has come to put at rest any lingering enmity, animosity, or resentment arising out of the Civil War. We are a united Nation with a common interest in the destiny of our Republic, no matter what section of the country we come from. The past differences between the North and South must be forever buried, and all sections of the country must present a solid and united front in defense of the ideals and principles of government which they cherish and to uphold them against our enemies from within who seek to tear them down and destroy our free institutions and republican form of government.

With this purpose in view and in a spirit of good will, and to further cement the feeling of unity between the North and South, engendered by both the Spanish and World Wars, I introduced today a resolution authorizing funds to erect an equestrian statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee, to be located at Arlington, Va., his home prior to the Civil War, and where both northern and Confederate soldiers have found their last resting place.

General Lee's ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War. He was a graduate of West Point, served with distinction in the Mexican War, was Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, and commander in chief of the Confederate armies in the field. Robert E. Lee is universally beloved and esteemed in the North and South for his private as well as public qualities. He was one of the most remarkable men in American history, of lofty and pure character, an able, brilliant, and daring general, who ranks not only among the most famous of our own country but of any nation and of any time. Even in defeat he retained the affection and faith of his troops and the respect of General Grant and his victorious army and of the people of the North. Time will increase his fame and the high regard in which he is held by the American people, regardless of partisanship and sectionalism.

There is a splendid equestrian statue of General Grant in a conspicuous place between the Capitol and the Washington Monument. There are also equestrian statues of other famous northern generals, such as Sherman, Thomas, and Sheridan, located throughout the city of Washington.

I shall ask for a public hearing on the resolution so that ample opportunity will be afforded to American citizens to express their sentiments on honoring the name and fame of Gen. Robert E. Lee, one of the noblest characters and greatest generals born in America. There are few survivors of the Grand Army of the Republic, but I am confident that they would be among the first to pay tribute to the memory of their gallant foe.

WHY NOT HAVE A VOTE ON THE TOWNSEND OLD-AGE REVOLVING PENSION PLAN?

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Townsend old-age pension plan, now before Congress, is entitled from every standpoint to a record vote before adjournment. Without criticizing anyone, calling any names, or becoming excited, let us approach this matter calmly and fairly, and ascertain if this great humanitarian measure is not of sufficient importance for the hired servants of the people, their agents and representatives in Congress, to record their vote for or against the Townsend old-age pension plan.

A very short while ago there was a humble, lovable, physician, with scarcely any means whatever, attending the poor, the sick, and the dying in and about Long Beach, Calif. He was a kindly man, going about doing good and worrying over the distress and poverty of the people. He lay awake nights, and, finally, in his golden heart and fertile mind, he evolved what is now known as the "Townsend old-age revolving pension plan." This man was Dr. Townsend—and that name will go down into the ages remembered, honored, and loved, for he has made America "old-age-pension conscious."

As the idea grew within him he gave up his practice, transmitted his enthusiasm to others, and from an humble and almost impossible beginning he has thousands upon thousands of Townsend clubs throughout the United States and approximately one-fifth of our population, or 25,000,000 signatures, on petitions in favor of the Townsend plan. Surely, they cannot all be wrong.

Dr. Townsend has never had a thought of himself and does not now. They claim it is a money scheme, and that he has made money out of it. I deny this charge and challenge anyone to prove it. Just take a look at his kindly, honest face and frail form, practically giving up his life for the love of his fellow men, and there you will find your answer.

What is this plan? First, to effect and maintain complete recovery in the United States and sustain this prosperity by a sufficient supply of purchasing power; secondly, to create a condition of employment assurance by replacing those over 60 now employed with younger workers who are walking the streets, thousands of them high school and college graduates; thirdly, to create a retirement fund for each individual who can and does qualify upon reaching the age of 60.

Logically, the next question is: "How and where are we going to raise the money to pay each person over 60 years of age $200 a month?" Permit me to quote an economist, one of the most noted in the United States. I quote Dr. Robert R. Doane, one of the foremost economists of our time. Dr. Doane is a professor and lecturer in schools of economics, a consultant of the United States Departments of Labor and Commerce, and, in addition, to 15 other outstanding national organizations. The following are his exact words:

The cumulative effect of a uniform Nation-wide turnover tax at the low rate of 2 percent on limited transactions could easily put a stop to further Budget deficit and finance such a social security program as envisaged by the Townsend plan.

Certainly sufficient funds could be raised by this turnover tax to more than care for the social security program now before the country.

The turnover method of taxation is an equitable and fair way to provide means to pay as you go the service charge of Government that will bring revenue and a blessing to all business and social enterprises once it is put into action.

"Where are we going to get the money?" This cry has echoed and reechoed down the ages when any measures for the welfare of the many instead of the few have been proposed. This question was not asked in 1917 and 1918 when we spent in about 17 months nearly $40,000,000,000. Twenty billions of it for shot and shell, death and destruction. Thousands of American boys are sleeping their eternal sleep beneath the soil of Flanders field. Nine billion dollars were spent to feed the hungry and starving of Europe. But it is a different story when it is even mentioned that we should take care of the poor and aged of our own country.

When Lincoln first suggested taking the chains off of millions of slaves a roar of protest went up. The argument was made that it was impossible and impracticable, for the reason that labor could not be obtained to take the place of the slave. Yet the emancipation proclamation will go down in history as an immortal document, and Lincoln is considered the tenderest memory in our history.

Where is the money coming from to take care of the aged of this country?

I ask you, where does the money come from to pay nearly $2,000,000,000 a year for direct help, crime, and welfare work in this Nation? Where does the money come from to pay millions and millions every year to paint the lips and cheeks of the women of this country? This remark may not help me with the ladies, but it goes anyway. Where does the money come from to pay our terrible bills for cheating and killing each other? Where do the billions come from for automobiles, airplanes, and injuries and deaths that result from our speed mania? When we dare mention anything for father and mother and their old age we are laughed at.

Maybe I am old-fashioned, but I say to Congress that never since man was first created did a son or a daughter ever live to see the day that they regretted being good to father and mother. Never will any nation ever fall for taking adequate care of the aged and the helpless.

When I was a boy I heard my mother sing a thousand times and more, Over the Hills to the Poorhouse, I Wander Alone and to Die; now it is Over the Hills to the County Hospital, I Wander Alone and to Die. Why, that little, frail mother of mine, with 11 children, carrying a load the average man would break under—I know just what she would say, "Son, you be good to the old folks, and God will bless you."

This is old-fashioned, I know, but I am just a new Member and will let it stand. Living with me in Oakland, Calif., for 15 years, she is the sweetest memory of my life, and the hands that used to feed me and cool my fevered brow now touch me only in my dreams. But if she were living today, I would love to fold her in my arms and never let her go. So Members of Congress, if this is old-fashioned, make the most of it.

Dr. Townsend has, to my mind, one of the most humane and helpful ideas since Lincoln freed the slaves. It is not perfect; what measure of man is perfect? There is hope, sweetness, and love in the Townsend old-age pension plan.

But they tell us it is a crime for Dr. Townsend and his supporters to offer hope to the old folks of this country through an impracticable plan. Who knows today what will work and what will not work?

Is this plan practicable? I claim any plan is practicable which absorbs hundreds of thousands of indigent inmates of poor farms, poorhouses, and other charitable institutions, some supported by city, county, State, and fraternal organizations. All of these people, at the age of 60, would come within the provisions of the Townsend plan, removing a huge tax burden.

This plan would take the aged of this country, lonely and destitute, from the county poor farms and county hospitals and place them in their own homes. Do you not think they would be happier with their own cookstove, their own furniture, their own beds, and their own neighbors to talk to?

We can pass unanimously in the House and Senate a monetary plan that would prove useless and impracticable tomorrow. We think we know, but in these fast-changing international times we know very little. Not one single individual ever died on account of hope, but rather from a lack of it. Hope is the white light burning in every human heart; the thought that we will be happier tomorrow than today. When that light goes out we are done, for life is such a difficult game and there are so many things over which we have no control—financial troubles, sickness, and death—but always, high up in the blue skies, shines the silver star of human hope.

Two thousand years ago a man came upon this earth and said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." It was a simple doctrine, but it still stands unrecalled. After 2,000 years we have been trying to improve on that doctrine, but have failed miserably. Times have proven that if we do not take care of our neighbors voluntarily, we will be obliged to take care of them involuntarily, as we are doing today, when we have over 20,000,000 people on the relief roll.

I say to my colleagues, in all humility, for I honestly feel that I know so little, "Do you not think that we should forget for a moment our selfish pride and individual bills, our pet ideas, and pay attention to a great humanitarian measure like the Townsend old-age-pension plan?"

Do you not think one-fifth of our people, in favor of a certain measure, are entitled to at least a vote? Again I say they cannot all be wrong. Parliamentary procedure or no parliamentary procedure, do you not think that the millions of mothers of this country who went into the shadow of death for you and me are entitled to a hearing? I am not mentioning father, for he will get along somehow.

Do you not think these millions of American people who are in favor of the Townsend plan are entitled to have this measure brought on the floor of the House for a vote? If you have any amendments as to the amount or otherwise, let us debate them. Let us not laugh at the hopes of the old folks of this country.

Let me appeal to you to give the old folks a vote on the Townsend old-age-pension plan. Can you not sense the voices of these mighty millions? Can you not hear the countless prayers on bended knees, in hovels of mud and misery, in the desert shack and in the farmhouse, in the foreclosed home, in the hearts and souls of millions of our troubled people who sacrificed so that our Nation is what it is today? They feel that it is their only hope against the poverty and misery of old age.

I know that you will give them a record vote, and for my poor little 1-vote self, so there will be no misunderstanding, I shall take my stand alongside of the poor, the troubled, the aged, the lonely, the helpless, and voiceless of this country and vote for and support the Townsend old-age-pension plan. And if it goes down—well, you can just laugh at me if you want to, but I will go down with it just the same.

THE EFFICACY OF THE LOTTERY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial appearing in the Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the colony of New Jersey had its seat of government at Burlington in 1772. On November 28 of that year, Governor Franklin (son of Benjamin), of New Jersey, transmitted to the Earl of Dartmouth the Minutes of Council and Assembly in a letter wherein he wrote:

I have the Honour to transmit to Your Lordship by this opportunity Copies of the Journals of the Privy and Legislative Council, the Votes of the Assembly and the Laws passed at the last Session held at Perth Amboy. Of these, three are passed with Clauses suspending their taking effect until His Majesty's Pleasure shall be signified thereupon viz.

The acts referred to were:

First—

An Act for establishing the Boundary or partition Line between the Colonies of New York & Nova Caesarea or New Jersey, and for confirming the Titles & possessions.

Second—

An Act to enable all Persons who are His Majesty's Liege Subjects, either by Birth or Naturalization, to inherit and hold real Estates, notwithstanding any defects of Purchases made before Naturalization within this Colony.

Third—

An Act to enable certain persons to erect and draw a Lottery for raising the Sum of One Thousand & fifty pounds, to be applied for the purposes therein mentioned.

With respect to the lottery act, Governor Franklin said:

The principal purpose of this Lottery is to defray the Expenses of making a Road that will be highly beneficial to the Inhabitants settled in the North Eastern parts of this province, and to the City of New York, which must otherwise fall upon a public spirited Gentleman who has already expended considerable Sums on that account. This Law being of immediate necessity, it would be extremely agreeable to the Inhabitants of that part of the Colony to have His Majesty's Confirmation of it as soon as possible, and I cannot but earnestly recommend it to Your Lordship.

The road, it seems, had been constructed by Col. John Scuyler, at his own expense, some years before, for 3 miles from his copper mine at Second River to the main road leading from Newark to New York.

Royal assent to the act was finally had and the road funds were raised by lottery.

Subsequently the seat of the Colonial Government removed to Perth Amboy and then New Jersey joined the Continental Congress.

In the documents relating to the Colonial History of New Jersey prepared and edited by authority of the State, at the request of the New Jersey Historical Society (newspaper extracts) are found interesting reference to numerous lotteries held from time to time for various worthy purposes.

From the New York Mercury of December 3, 1759, there is mention of the lottery conducted for the benefit of the Lutheran Church in Hackensack, N. J. To quote, in part, from the reference:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

For repairing of the Lutheran Church, in Hackensack, erected and to be drawn near Shuter's Island, about Two Miles from Elizabeth—Town Point; consisting of Four Thousand Tickets, at Two Dollars each: * * *

The Drawing to commence on the 11th day of December inst. if full, under the Inspection and Management of Lawrence Van Buskirk, Jacob Titsort, Johannes Demarest, Esquires, Capt. Jacobus Van Buskirk, Lawrence Van Horn, and John Vanorden; who are to be under Oath for the true Performance of the Trust reposed in them.

On behalf of the lottery the Pennsylvania Journal, No. 843, February 1, 1759, printed the following:

TO THE INHABITANTS OF PENNSYLVANIA

In the Pennsylvania Journal of November 30th, and in that of January 25th, an indiscriminate charge is brought against lotteries, as in their own nature irreligious, and ruinous to society in their consequences. * * * It would be endless for me to mention, many lotteries carried on by the Trustees of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton), the governments of New York and Connecticut, and almost every other on the continent. Yet all these this writer brings under the general imputation of being the enemies of Religion and of the Poor, the abettors and patrons of the most contagious and dangerous vice. * * *

Is the use of lots forbidden by God in scripture? By no means; he ordered his chosen tribes to use them in the division of their inheritance. Are they contrary to the Christian revelation? So far from it, that we know they were used by the apostles themselves.

From the archives of the General Assembly of the Province of New Jersey we have recorded under date of March 10, 1762, the following:

That the Speaker with the House waited upon the Governor who gave assent to the following bills.

2. An Act to empower the Church-Wardens and Vestry-Men of St. Mary's Church in the City of Burlington, to raise by Lottery a Sum of Money for repairing the Church, Parsonage-House and Burying-Ground in said City.

3. An Act to empower the Managers of the Bound-Brook Bridge, in the County of Somerset, to raise by Lottery, a Sum of Money for rebuilding and completing the said Bridge.

In the New York Mercury of January 9, 1764, is found the following announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY FOR THE USE OF THE COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY

The Legislature of the Colony of New Jersey, having been pleased to countenance this rising Seat of Learning, so far as to pass an Act, enabling the Trustees to erect and draw a Lottery, for raising any sum, not exceeding Three Thousand Pounds, Proclamation Money; it is hoped, that the generous Design in making this Law, will be carried into Execution, by all those who wish well to the Institution, or who are desirous of promoting useful Knowledge in these Infant Countries, and preparing our own Youth to sustain the publick Offices in Church and State. The following Scheme is calculated for raising the Sum of Two Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-nine Pounds Eighteen Shillings and Six Pence Proclamation Money: * * *

The New York Gazette, or the Weekly Post Boy, no. 1517, May 11, 1772, carries the following:

ROAD LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of Five Hundred Pounds, to be applied in erecting Bridges, and in repairing the Post-Road leading from Powles-Hook Ferry to the City of Albany, through the Counties of Bergen, Orange, Ulster and Albany.

The New York Journal, or the General Advertiser, no. 1537, June 18, 1772, carries this announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds, New-York Currency, for the Benefit of Christ Church, in New-Brunswick. * * *

The Congregation of Christ Church, being under the Necessity of proposing this Lottery, in Order to assist them in erecting a Steeple, and making some Necessary Repairs to their Church; hope it will meet with a favorable Reception from the Public * * *

In the New York Gazette, or the Weekly Post Boy, no. 1537, September 28, 1772, is found the following:

WOODBIDGE LOTTERY

For raising the Sum of One Hundred and Sixty-eight Pounds, New York Currency, for repairing and finishing of the Metuchin Presbyterian Meeting House, in the upper part of said Woodbridge, in the Province of East- New Jersey.

Another church lottery was conducted to raise the sum of £545, New York money, for the benefit of the Presbyterian Society at Springfield in east New Jersey.

In the announcement of April 29, 1773, Rivington's New York Gazetteer, no. 2, it is set forth:

The Church is enclosed, but Money is wanting to finish it. The good People of this Country are therefore earnestly intreated to contribute their Assistance that the Tickets may be immediately disposed of, and the Inhabitants assemble together for the Performance of Divine Worship. * * *

The Delaware lottery was conducted primarily for the benefit of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton). It asked for the raising of £5,626, or $15,000, for the use of the College of New Jersey, the Presbyterian congregation at Princeton, and the united Presbyterian congregations of New Castle and Christiana Bridge.

Rivington's New York Gazetteer, no. 4, May 13, 1773, sets forth the following regarding it:

The growing importance of the College of New- Jersey, for the use of which the above Lottery is principally designed, is now generally known through every province of America. It has hitherto subsisted, and been raised to its present situation, entirely by the favour of the public. In the center of North- America, and in a pleasant healthy country, it is well fitted for the most extensive usefulness. The success which hath attended the vigorous efforts already made to raise its funds, and furnish the means of a complete and finished education, to all who are sent to it, has encouraged those concerned in the present attempt, especially as several judicious persons have warmly recommended it, signifying their Surprise, that at a time, when so many have taken this method of promoting public undertakings, a Seminary, of such importance, should not also put in for a share of the general benevolence. This added to other schemes for the support and improvement of the College, will afford to many friends of that institution an opportunity of contributing, with very little risk of losing, and a considerable chance of gain to themselves, who would not incline that the small sums they could spare, should appear in a subscription paper.

TRENTON, May 22, 1773.

The Managers of the Fishing- Island Lottery, for the Benefit of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, in Trenton, are under the Necessity of postponing drawing said Lottery, until Thursday, the first Day of July next, at which Time the Lottery will certainly be drawn. They desire their Friends who have had Tickets to sell (if they have any on hand) to return them to the Managers before that time.

At page 524 of the same work is found the following:

SCHEME OF THE CREEK LOTTERY

For raising the sum of £300, New York currency, to be applied in clearing and deepening the channel of Elizabeth- Town Creek, in New Jersey, so as to make it navigable for lumber boats, from the mouth thereof, to the Stone Bridge, in the Center of the town.

The New York Journal, no. 1594, July 22, 1772, prints this announcement:

SCHEME OF A LOTTERY

To raise the sum of two hundred and fifty two pounds New- York money, for the benefit of the Presbyterian Congregation at Elizabeth- Town Raway, to enable the said congregation to repair their Meeting- House, and for other purposes necessary for the support of the Gospel at that place.

From New Jersey in this year of grace comes anew a Nation-wide movement for a lottery—this time a national lottery.

The Irish Sweepstakes winnings of a few days ago tend to focus attention upon the value of straight thinking now as in the olden times, when revenue much needed was not available from ordinary sources.

So it is that the Bergen Evening Record, of Hackensack, N. J., in its issue of March 29, 1935, printed the following worth-while editorial:

[From the Bergen Evening Record, Mar. 29, 1935]

ARE WE A RACE OF HYPOCRITES?

Four Bergen County residents are sharing rich cash rewards for their luck in holding winning tickets in the Irish Hospital Sweepstakes. The race was run this morning.

It is impossible to estimate how much Bergen County money went to Ireland for participation in the lottery. One only hears of the few winners, not of the many holders of losing tickets. But it is significant that one-third of the 1,266 winning tickets drawn were held by Americans.

Despite the antigambling laws, despite the fact that the Government had clamped down on the distribution of such tickets here, and efforts of the postal authorities to block them in the mails, a fortune in American money went overseas for participation in the lottery—money that might just as well have been kept here if the Kenney lottery bill were passed.

Every Member of Congress knows that gambling on lotteries is prevalent, that human nature being what it is it cannot be stopped, but they prefer to go along in smug hypocrisy rather than liberalize the laws. It was so with prohibition for a decade. Liquor was sold openly over the bars, gangsters and racketeers became rich from their illicit trade, and not one penny in taxes went to the Government. When given the opportunity, the people quickly ended the farce.

Where are the bootleggers today? Some are still plying their trade because Government taxes were made too high, but the majority of them probably will be found running lottery rackets. Their activities may be curtailed by alert police departments, but the traffic can never be entirely stamped out. It is a moot question whether the time has not come to recognize the fact that we cannot legislate morals into people. If they insist on gambling and are willing to pay a tax for the privilege, the revenue had better go to governmental agencies, which need it badly, rather than the racketeers and the politicians corrupted by such easy money.

The New Jersey Legislature is faced with a similar problem. The joint resolution that would permit the people to decide for themselves whether the antigambling section of the State constitution should be repealed has been blocked by a few votes in the house of assembly.

The weakest argument advanced by those opposed to liberalization of the laws is that the people would vote for legalized gambling, if given the opportunity, and the assembly should save them from themselves. Public gambling may create certain evils, but it might be better to have it in the open, which would at least end the hypocrisy and corruption, and prevent the criminal element that thrives on them from becoming a tacitly accepted factor in American community life.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 12 minutes following the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, cannot the gentleman cut that down a bit?

Mr. GILDEA. No; I am asking for 12 minutes.

Mr. BLAND. With 10 minutes granted to the other side, I shall not object.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes following the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, Consent Calendar is mandatory on the Speaker. He must call it on this day. It has never been the intent that this day be taken up with speeches. I do not know how these previous requests to make speeches were allowed. They should have been objected to; and if no one else does it, I shall object.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman was present when the gentleman from Pennsylvania got 12 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not hear the request or I should have objected to it. The procedure of this House must be protected. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House must think I am a very generous and a very patient waiter. I am very sorry that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is not on the floor at the moment. I shall not ask him the question or say what I had planned to say.

There are none so blind as those who will not see; and I feel ashamed, thrice ashamed, for the people who seem to be deliberately strangling a great industry.

I am going to speak first to the southern Members, the Members who have the cotton farmers in their districts; there are 2,000,000 of these farmers. There are 9,000,000 people who gain their livelihood from the raw-cotton industry. Multiply this by 3, the number in the average family, and you have 27,000,000 people affected by any curtailment of the cotton-growing industry.

In 7 months of this year, two and a half million fewer bales of cotton were exported to other countries than the year before. The normal production of cotton is from fourteen to fifteen million bales. It is down to 10,000,000 bales and going lower.

Think what it means to kill the great cotton-textile industry of this country, which employs 400,000 people. It means, with the average family of 3, that 1,200,000 are affected. Think of the suffering that will cause.

The Secretary of Agriculture states that we may have a higher processing tax. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the membership of this House do something to remove the processing tax, instead of increasing it. Do you realize how you are literally torturing the people who work in the mills? I have protest after protest from people all over New England, and also from the South, who are affected by the closing of the mills.

Do you realize that during January and February of this year 24,000,000 square yards of cotton were imported from Japan, according to textile-industry figures, and we are doing nothing about it? It seems to me this is one of the greatest tragedies this country faces.

Do you of the West know what it is going to mean to you, if the cotton pickers and the cotton growers lose their work? Do you know what it is going to mean, if mill after mill is closed? Do you know what it is to go through a mill or a mill town when the mills are closed? It is like going through a graveyard.

All our people want is a chance to work, and I honestly believe, if you cannot raise the tariff enough under the present law to protect our mills from the imports coming in from foreign countries, you can have a quota or you can have an embargo which will stop this tremendous importation of foreign cotton goods now coming into this country. The President has the power now to do this; but if he will not act, Congress must.

I am pleading with you, my friends. This is not a sectional matter. I know how the South has hurt the northern mills, but you of the South are just as vitally interested in preventing the strangulation of every branch of the cotton industry as we are. Perhaps your farmers are getting a little money, but what of the people who pick the cotton? What of their families, who have no money to spend? How can you look with any sort of equanimity upon the killing of one of the greatest industries in our country?

I earnestly ask you to work to wipe out the processing tax and to enact a law which will prevent the importation of cotton textiles.

You have promised so much and talked about being interested in the welfare of the country and in giving work to the people, I want you to act upon your promises—and shame, thrice shame upon you if you do not. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARTWRIGHT). Under the order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived for a show-down between the "new dealers" and the American people. On the one hand the Department of Justice withdraws a case which has reached the Supreme Court testing the constitutionality of the N. R. A., and on the other hand the lord chief executioner of the N. R. A., Donald Richberg, informs the public that prosecutions will follow failure to comply with its requirements. The administration, undoubtedly from the facile pen of Mr. Richberg, has prepared a brandnew authorization of the N. R. A. with still further powers than in the original act. Senator HARRISON introduced this revised administration bill last Friday. It is time for a show-down as to whether greater authority is granted to prosecute innocent people under N. R. A. or whether business can be let alone and allowed to attend to its own affairs.

Another illustration: On the one hand the Secretary of Agriculture threatens to increase the processing tax and on the other a leading authority on cotton, the distinguished Senator GEORGE, flays the Secretary of Agriculture for this threat, and says he is not only turning the cotton export trade over to foreign countries but that he is unfit to be Secretary of Agriculture. We need a show-down right here.

Who is this Secretary Wallace, anyway, who is telling the people of the country that if they do not like his method he will give them more of it? He is Secretary of Agriculture by the grace of President Roosevelt, without the slightest experience in governmental affairs, but the owner of a rural agricultural publication. That may be sufficient qualification for a man to tell the American people what he is going to do to them; but if it is, it is a new-deal type. Let us have a show-down.

On the one hand we have the Secretary of State and Chairman of the Tariff Commission uttering pretty words without argument over the radio in an endeavor to convince the public of the merits of reciprocal tariff treaties, while on the other hand Members of Congress of both parties, realizing the iniquity of these treaties, have introduced bills in behalf of American industry calling for the repeal of the reciprocal tariff law. It is high time for a show-down.

I quote from an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post on Sunday:

Two years ago the President informed Congress that he was then studying a "broad public-works labor-creating program." This program, if any has been formulated, has never been vouchsafed to Congress. Instead of furnishing a bill of particulars, the President has merely demanded unprecedented spending powers, leaving Congress to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear while he goes fishing.

In 2 years no constructive program has been offered, but there has been profligacy of expenditure unequaled and unrivaled in peace time in all history. The country has been anxious to supply all needs for relief, but it has now reached the point where it wants to know whether this orgy of spending is to be continued and no bottom found to the sieve, or whether constructive business restoration is to result. We want a show-down.

Senator WALSH, in the Senate, and my colleague, Mrs. ROGERS in the House, have called attention to the textile difficulties in New England. These cannot be cured unless manufacturers know where they stand and under what laws they will be called on to transact business. Sweetly worded radio addresses by Secretary Hull and Chairman O'Brien will fail to convince the people of the merits of tariff reductions when in 2 years there have been only 21 cases of appeals to the Tariff Commission.

There is a right way and a wrong way to revise the tariff. The right way is by congressional action. The wrong way is by political subterfuge. With tremendous majorities in both Houses for over 2 years and a Democratic President in the White House there has been ample opportunity for such revision provided there was any occasion for it. Why did not President Roosevelt take a leaf out of the book of history made by President Wilson? The latter no sooner entered the White House than he called Congress in special session to revise the tariff in accordance with Democratic doctrines. If President Roosevelt had followed this example the people of the country and the Republican Party could have found no fault as that was high right under majority rule. But instead he adopted the wrong method and was misled by theorists like Secretary Hull and Assistant Secretary Sayre into revising the tariff by subterfuge. At his dictation Congress was forced to pass a law permitting the President in cooperation with representatives of other governments to write the tariff laws of this country rather than Congress itself. That is the wrong way. The people and business resent it and I predict that from now on the going will be harder for the Democratic Party and the new deal. The time has come for a show-down.

We are told the most recent trade treaty is one with Haiti wherein the duty on Haitian rum is reduced 50 percent for the purpose of preventing bootlegging. The tariff has been accused of all sorts of iniquities, but whoever heard of it before as part of a rum-bootlegging proposition? If this is reason to change tariff rates fixed by Congress, excuses for murder under the guise of liberty of action will soon be the law of the land.

All the people of the country ask is a square deal, which was the slogan of a famous predecessor of the President, rather than the theories of "brain trusters" under the new deal. The day for a show-down is here.

Secretary Wallace and his cohorts have endeavored to throw up a smoke screen about an increase of exports conditional upon an increase of imports. He raises the false alarm of isolationism. There is no such thing. This country is dependent on foreign countries for many raw materials, and these are practically all on the free list. What Secretary Wallace wants to do is what he admitted in his testimony last year before the Ways and Means Committee, namely, to put out of business small industries in this country. Let us have a show-down.

No one doubts that foreign countries dislike our tariff rates as they deprive them to a certain extent of the best market in the world, namely, the United States of America. No one doubts that every nation invited to sit around a table and tell our people what laws to write reducing tariff rates will be tickled to pieces to do so and praise such men as Secretaries Wallace and Hull and Chairman O'Brien. I care more what the American people say than what representatives of foreign governments think. We have been accused of favoring special interests. Under this administration the words "special interests" are synonymous with "foreign manufacturers." It is time for a show-down. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILDEA] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, April 1 is observed in United Mine Workers circles and by my constituents back home in Pennsylvania as 8-hour day. The wheels of industry are silenced today as the miners and their friends pay tribute to the sturdier trades-unionists who established the 8-hour day. This year the All Fools' Day connection attending the annual recurrence of April 1 seems apt and applicable to any 8-hour celebration held anywhere, because with 50,000 people in my home county of Schuylkill on the relief list, with the Governments of the State of Pennsylvania and the United States pouring $500,000 monthly into the bottomless abyss of relief—one-half million dollars for food orders alone—it is time to call time out and ask, Where are we headed?

To those of you who uphold the sanctity of contract—the sacredness of private enterprise—who deplore with uplifted hands the regimentation of men, let me ask how many of you have stood and watched the forming of a relief line in any of our towns and cities? Can there be a more abject picture of regimentation than that offered by distressed humanity forming in line to fill out "pink slips" of poverty and wretchedness that they may be recognized as deserving of a weekly food-order dole?

And so, Mr. Speaker, on this 8-hour day I intrude upon the time of the greatest deliberative body in all the world to pay tribute to those who hurdled the obstacle of "divine-right" consciousness in establishing labor's right to a place in the sun, and without dwelling too long in the past, let us look ahead from the 8-hour-day milestone to the 30-hour-week goal and to the day when we as the Congress of these United States measure up to our responsibilities and refuse to rest satisfied until every citizen of this country who wants to work is again employed at a gainful occupation.

In criticizing past action needed remedy must be offered. Today we have considered the administration work bill. We did not stand up to be counted when the $50 average was written into that measure, and, having passed the buck once, we pass it again, and in so doing admit that we are not satisfied to pay the full price for recovery—not satisfied to go the full distance toward putting all our unemployed to work.

The Townsend plan has been laughed out of court. It has been branded illogical, fantastic, a gold brick sold irresponsible people.

In truth it is just as practical as we want to make it. The Townsend plan in its revenue-raising provisions is an admission that if we want recovery we must be satisfied to pay for it.

I hold no brief for the proposition offered to retire every man and woman in this country 60 years of age or over on a $200-per-month spending allowance.

But I do say $4,800,000,000 spread over a 2-year period is not the price America must pay to lift this country up by its boot straps.

It has been said that the Townsend plan necessitates the raising of $24,000,000,000 yearly. I am not in position to testify as to the accuracy of Dr. Townsend's figures, but I am mathematician enough to know that just half of $24,000,000,000—$12,000,000,000—would put 10,000,000 men to work 12 months in each year, at a monthly wage of $100—just twice the average offered in the work bill today engaging attention.

Let us be honest with ourselves. Let us ask the question our President asked the country in his fireside talk 1 year ago. Is the district we represent better off today than it was this time last year—or this time 2 years ago?

To be truthful about it, the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania in this third year of the new deal is going backward instead of forward, and the fault is not the President's; the responsibility is yours and mine.

Panaceas are offered in the form of old-age insurance, unemployment insurance, labor relations, equal representation, and other shop-worn and antiquated cure-alls, when in truth the day for poultices is past; a major operation is needed.

Certainty of employment for all is more important than unemployment insurance.

Certainty of employment in mid-age provides the best policy of old-age insurance that can be written.

Labor relationship means nothing to the man divorced from his job, and the only cure worth thinking about or talking about must come through raising the general wage rate all over the country by fixing a minimum wage for skilled and unskilled labor on public works and thereby compelling industries to raise wages to hold employees.

Let us count the cost. You and I have been told the Townsend transaction tax would raise the price of necessities 25 percent and increase the cost of luxuries from 60 to 80 percent.

The only figures I am interested in are these:

A man earning $100 per month, paying 2 cents on every dollar he spends, can only be taxed $2 per month.

If his income is $200 per month, his tax bill doubles, and he is called upon to pay $4 per month.

If you happen to be fortunate enough to have a congressional checking account after April 1 of $833.33 per month, you could be called upon, under a 2-cent transaction tax, to return to the Government of the United States $16.66 monthly to purchase security for our beloved country, to give jobs to 10,000,000 idle Americans, and to fulfill the promise of our esteemed President to make the security of our men, women, and children the paramount aim of the new deal and his administration.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. As Democrats suggested these remedies, I would like to ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the President is opposed to all of these suggestions—the minimum wage, the 30-hour law, and adequate pensions?

Mr. GILDEA. I am fully aware of it but I regret the fact.

As a new Member of Congress—one of those freshmen of the class of 1935 commonly supposed to have ridden into Congress on the President's coat tails—I have sat patiently through endless discussions—I have enjoyed the political gestures toward 1936 offered by well-meaning gentlemen on both sides of the aisle, but as one who realizes the unimportance of his own political future, I say to you in all sincerity that the only thing worth while, the only future at stake, is the security of America, and we as a Congress of the United States first, and as new dealers, or 1936 opportunists second, should approach the problems now before us with honest convictions and give real attention to the social measures promised and as yet unfulfilled.

The 30-hour week in a Nation beset with idleness is not abhorrent.

Back home there are mine workers who, at one time in the mining industry, never saw the light of day from the start of winter until the lengthening daylight hours of spring gave them a chance to bask in the glory of God's sunshine on the way to work in the morning and for a few hours as the day lengthened upon returning home.

The present Lieutenant Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, as a boy, went into the mines before sun-up and returned home in the shadows of darkness after completing 10 hours or more underground.

When the 12-hour day gave place to 10 hours, when the 10-hour day gave place to 9, when progress lessened the work period from 9 to 8, there were those who stood in the pathway of progress and lamented the fact that men of property were no longer permitted to manage their business as they saw fit. "Divine Right" Baer used all the arguments in 1902 that are being used now. It remained for an earlier Roosevelt, through the use of a big stick, to whip Baer's generation of mossbacks into line, and my regret today is, that with an overwhelming Democratic majority in the House, with an administration elected through a decided leaning to the left—we lack the courage to do what is right and what is expected with a full 100-percent follow-through.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Practically every one of the strikes—the textile strike, the automobile strike, the coal strike, and the rubber strike are based on the fact that they are asking for a 30-hour week.

Mr. GILDEA. That is true.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Labor Committee of this House, I regret the lack of a definite labor program or policy.

Labor relationship, equal representation, and all other bro-mides should be placed secondary to the problem of putting idle Americans to work at a security wage.

I believe and suggest that the 30-hour-week bill is worthy of the best thought and utmost attention that can be given it by the membership of this House. It merits a place on the calendar—it demands its day in court, and the 50,000 men, women, and children back in my home county depending on a food-order dole demand that I ask this Government to cease subsidizing a soulless industry to the extent of $500,000 per month and to move toward a more abundant future by spreading work through the 30-hour-week process—spreading work through limiting machinery and mass production to 30 hours per week and then, with eyes trained on a definite and happy goal, impose the Townsend transaction tax that we may pay as we go and fulfill the President's promise by putting every American citizen who wants to work back on the job.

Mr. Speaker, and you, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I propose putting these ideas into form of a spread-the-work, pay-as-you-go bill, and I ask your earnest consideration of the measure to the end that we cease temporizing with this gigantic problem and devote ourselves seriously to the task of lifting 10,000,000 Americans to our accepted standards of living as a safeguard and provision against their pulling our American structure and standard of living down to the unemployment level.

This country cannot endure with one-third its employable citizens condemned to idleness. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILDEA. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not a fact that the great majority of labor disputes prevailing today are due to the wrong and unfair interpretation placed on section 7 (a) by Mr. Richberg, now appointed as head of the N. R. A.?

Mr. GILDEA. Most all our troubles are due to legalisms and to the wrong interpretation of intent legalistic minds are permitted to place an ordinary phraseology. The 8-hour day United Mine Workers are today celebrating back home has been made a mockery through permitting a qualifying clause justifying the working of overtime on emergency or necessary repair work to become the law. The clause referred to reads: "Or other causes necessary to efficient operation" and strange to say in a contract establishing an 8-hour day this clause has been so construed as to permit the operation of three 8-hour shifts in a single day being worked at the central breaker and stripping operation, adding to unemployment and leaving no cause for rejoicing or 8-hour celebration. So also section 7a has been swerved from its original purpose by wrong interpretation of intent.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House at this time is to inform the Members that I have today introduced a bill to provide for the aged people of our country. On the 16th day of January last I introduced a somewhat similar bill, which was designated as H. R. 3977. The bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but the committee declined to report it out. A petition to discharge the committee was laid on the Clerk's desk, but has failed to receive the necessary number of signatures.

In the meantime we have been informed of the objections held by the Committee on Ways and Means and many Members of the House to H. R. 3977, and as a result of these objections, and after consultation with Members, a new bill has been drawn, the bill which I have today introduced.

The present bill retains the basic principle of the now world-famed Townsend plan, but with many modifications and changes in technique, although not departing essentially from Dr. Townsend's idea. I apprehend that this new bill will also be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for its consideration, and, I trust, for its favorable action. At any rate the bill will, in the ordinary course, be printed so that all members of the House can come into immediate possession of an official copy. It will be on the desks of the Members in their offices for scrutiny and study.

In order that this measure, as now proposed, may receive the close scrutiny and earnest study of the Members, let me say that the bill is the result of long and patient labor on the part of a sincere group of experienced Members of this House. It is a group composed of men who strongly favor an adequate old-age pension, but who could not reconcile themselves to the Townsend plan as set forth in H. R. 3977. So they took the matter in hand and have prepared the measure which I now submit. Even in its present form, it may not meet with the approval of all, but it certainly meets with the approval of many who could not see their way clear to support the first bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. What was wrong with the old Townsend bill, the original bill? Clubs were formed all over the country favoring that bill. What was wrong with it?

Mr. McGROARTY. It did not go far enough; it did not go into detail enough. For one thing, the old bill provided that everybody 60 years and over who would withdraw from gainful occupation must receive a pension of $200 a month. The new bill provides that it shall not exceed $200 a month. This new bill is so carefully drawn and so fair and just in its provisions that I am sure a great many Members of the House who did not agree with the original bill will agree with this.

What I want to urge upon the Committee on Ways and Means is to let us have the bill here on the floor of the House for debate or for amendment, but, above all things, for action, no matter what that action may be.

It is not a matter which we can lightly ignore. We are to bear in mind that the country has become old-age-pension minded. There are 30,000,000 of the people of this country back of the Townsend plan alone, and that is a vast force of public opinion to be behind anything. It is a force that must be reckoned with, no matter who likes it or who does not, a force that must be faced sooner or later. Pensions or annuities, as we prefer to call them, are inevitable. And they must be so adequate as to make living secure and comfortable for the aged, a proposal that will preserve to them the dignity of life and not a pauper's dole that would humiliate them before the world and bow their heads in shame before their fellow men and still leave them without sufficient means to exist.

Here we present to you a solution to the problem of business depression, a sure antidote to the machine which is devouring us and will continue to devour us unless the antidote is applied—purchasing power put in the hands of the masses. That is the antidote and the only antidote. If full prosperity were to return tomorrow the machine in 6 months would again so overproduce goods and materials as to again put men out of work. Yet we cannot rid ourselves of the machine. We have it and must keep it. The only way to keep up with it is to put purchasing power in the hands of the masses, to take men over 60 years of age out of competition with younger men and at the same time make it possible for the elders to become purchasing consumers. This bill which I have introduced today will do that. And it will not cost the Government a penny to do it. It is a challenge to the exercise of your common sense. Let no man tell me that this Nation, the richest and the most powerful the world has ever known, is futile to care for its aged citizens. I would be ashamed of my country were it to make such a humiliating admission.

We propose a plan that is workable, practicable, and sound. It should be enacted into law without hesitation or delay.

Good, hard-headed business is a reason for it. And, if at the same time, we can be kind, then all the better for us. We live in a broken world that kindness can patch together again.

So many minds, so many creeds,
So many ways that wind and wind,
When all the help this sad world needs
Is just the art of being kind.

Let us face the task like men and in a valiant and honorable spirit.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF STATUTES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2077) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the "war minerals relief statutes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I recollect, this is a bill for the payment of $1,250,000 for interest under the war minerals relief statute from March 2, 1919, up to date. I understand that the principal has been paid, and the interest has been paid from the time that the original relief statute was passed up until the 2d day of March 1919.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman's information is not entirely correct. It is true a portion of this money is for interest. The law permitted a reimbursement of all net losses, and the net loss of interest is just as important as the net loss of principal.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there are several large claims here where the interest alone amounts to more than the principal. The principal has already been paid to these companies, and had they applied the principal payment to their indebtedness there would be no occasion for interest.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Washington is going to object, there is no need of engaging in argument about it. This bill passed the Senate Friday. It is merely to carry out what was the intent of Congress in 1919, when Congress passed the War Minerals Refund Act. These claimants have been driven to the Supreme Court four different times. It was the intention of Congress to pay them their net loss and all that is sought in this bill is to reimburse these people their net loss.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. COX. To permit me to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is this the bill which the Rules Committee granted a special rule for in the last session of Congress?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. This bill was given a special rule in the last session of Congress.

Mr. COX. And in the consideration of that rule the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain] made the statement that his committee was then investigating certain charges that had been made against some people in the different departments of the Government in reference to the manner in which these claims had been handled.

Mr. McFARLANE. Was it this company?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; it was not.

Mr. COX. No. With the leave of the House consideration of the rule was withdrawn. Mr. McSwain, as I understand it, has since made the statement that this committee has gone into all these matters thoroughly, and has found that this concern had nothing to do with any of those things his committee was investigating.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Georgia is correct. When this bill was under consideration in the last session of Congress, the Committee on Military Affairs was conducting an investigation of activities of the War Department and asked that the bill be laid aside even after debate had been carried on for approximately an hour and a half.

They made a thorough investigation. There were no complaints whatsoever against any of these war mineral claims. Let me state to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] that there are approximately 300 claims involved. Over half of them are less than $500. We are seeking by this bill to carry out the intent of Congress expressed in 1919. The Supreme Court has on four different occasions decided that interest on borrowed capital was an item that came within the purview of this law. The only reason this bill is here today is because they placed a cut-off date as of March 2, 1919, in the bill. There is not a line in the War Minerals Relief Act saying for what period of time interest on loans shall be calculated.

Mr. PITTINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. PITTINGER. The claims covered by this bill are for interest actually lost on money advanced at the request of the War Department?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Absolutely.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How could these people lose interest for a period of 16 years subsequent to the war when they have already been paid the interest and principal up to the 2d of March 1919?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say that if the gentleman borrows $1,000 and that obligation is not due until a certain date and he goes to the lender and offers him $1,000, that does not relieve him of the obligation to pay interest. That is this case exactly. These people, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, went out and borrowed this money. They borrowed this capital. These obligations did not fall due until after March 2, 1919. The Supreme Court held they were entitled to collect interest up to March 2, 1919—

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And no further.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Just a moment. But it wrote into the decision that the word "accrued" meant "incurred."

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

KENNESAW MOUNTAIN NATIONAL MEMORIAL MILITARY PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 59, to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain, in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. LESINSKI objected.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required. Only two objections have been made. The Clerk will report the bill.

Without objection, the Clerk will report the committee amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert the following—

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the committee amendments. The committee amendments purport to strike out language which is not in the bill, and to insert language which is already in the bill. The mistake came about in this way: When the bill was introduced during the last session the committee, by these amendments, suggested entirely different language for the bill. When it was reintroduced by myself at this session I adopted the committee language in toto. The error comes about through the submission of the report from the committee, which exactly copies the report rendered the last time; but these amendments are not applicable to the pending bill.

The point of order is that the committee amendments are not in order, since they propose to strike out language which is not now in the bill and to insert language which is already in the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order that with such a large change in the language the bill may be entirely different.

Mr. TARVER. It involves no change whatever. If the gentleman will examine the copy of the bill, which he has before him, he will see that it simply strikes out the language of the bill and then reinserts the identical language of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, if it is identical language, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that the remedy is to vote down the committee amendments.

Mr. TARVER. I think the committee amendments are out of order since they purport to strike out language which is not in the bill and to insert language which is already in the bill. In drafting the bill we have used exactly the committee language—the language suggested by these amendments.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the committee amendment proposes to strike out all of the original bill and insert a substitute in lieu thereof.

Mr. TARVER. The committee amendments are adjusted to the bill introduced during the last Congress, and they propose to strike out all of the language of that bill, which is not now before the House, and to insert the language of this bill. If the Chair will examine the language of the bill before him, he will see that the printer has stricken out all of the language of this bill and has then reinserted the identical language stricken out. Therefore, if a point of order is sustained to the amendments, the bill will be before the House in the exact language recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair fails to understand how the Chair can take action upon a matter of that sort. The committee has reported an amendment as a substitute. It seems to the Chair it is a question for the House as to whether it wishes to adopt the substitute or to adopt the gentleman's original bill.

Mr. TARVER. The committee amendment is out of order, because the committee proposes to strike out sections and language that are not in the bill. Therefore the committee amendments are not adjusted to the bill. Further, the committee amendments propose to insert language that is already in the bill. Therefore they are clearly out of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. A point of order against the committee amendments does not come until after the bill has been read and the committee amendment has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property within the military battlefield area and other areas of Civil War interest at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national battlefield park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and inspiration of the people and shall be known as the "Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park."

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national battlefield park as determined and fixed hereunder, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That under such funds available therefor he may acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national battlefield park as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

Sec. 3. Upon creation of the national battlefield park the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(a) Allow monuments and memorials to be erected in the park by and to the various organizations and individuals of either the Union or Confederate armies, subject to the written approval of said Secretary as to the location and character of such monuments and memorials.

(b) Make such regulations as are necessary from time to time for the care and protection of the park. Any person violating such regulations shall be guilty of an offense punishable by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

(c) Provide for the ascertainment and marking of the route of march of the Union and Confederate armies from Chattanooga, Tenn., through Georgia, and of principal battle lines, breastworks, fortifications, and other historical features along such route, and for the maintenance of such markers to such extent as deemed advisable and practicable.

Sec. 4. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national battlefield park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

Sec. 5. The sum of $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes herein designated.

Sec. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That when title to all the lands, structures, and other property within the military battlefield area and other areas of Civil War interest at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national battlefield park purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, such areas shall be, and they are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and inspiration of the people and shall be known as the 'Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park.'"

Mr. TARVER (interrupting the reading of the committee amendment). Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the first committee amendment, which is to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert certain language. The language which is proposed be inserted is identical with the language of section 1 now in the bill. The proposal of the committee amendment is simply to strike out existing language and then reinsert identical language.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot pass on that. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Georgia that is a matter for the House to determine. The Chair cannot enter into the purpose of the committee in proposing the amendment, since that is not within the province of the Chair. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the remedy that occurs to the Chair is for the House to vote down the committee amendment and pass the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, Mr. Speaker, so far as this amendment is concerned, I have no objection to its adoption, but it is a useless procedure. It strikes out language now in the bill and then reinserts it. The next amendment proposes to strike out all of section 2 (a) and (b) and all of sections 3 (a), (b), and (c), and (d), yet there are no such sections in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendment; it is all one amendment.

Mr. TARVER. May we have a vote on each amendment as it is read?

The SPEAKER. There is just one amendment; it is proposed as a substitute.

Mr. TARVER. No; if the Chair please, the first amendment is to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert the language which follows. Another amendment strikes out all of section 2 (a) and 3 (a), (b), and (c), and (d).

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute; it is simply one amendment proposed as a substitute to the bill.

Mr. TARVER. However much I may be convinced that the Chair is in error, I, of course, will yield to his decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of said national battlefield park as determined and fixed hereunder, the title and evidence of title to lands purchased to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That under such funds available therefor he may acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1938, such tracts of land within the said national battlefield park as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the Record at this point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is going to be the final disposition of the bill? Is this amendment a new bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I think the point was taken care of by the Speaker's decision on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia. Everything after the enacting clause has been stricken from the bill and the committee amendment is offered as a substitute. I have just asked unanimous consent that further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with, but that it be printed in the Record at this point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. If it is a new bill, practically, with the exception of the enacting clause, why is it not subject to one objection instead of three?

The SPEAKER. Because it is simply proposed as an amendment; it is not a part of the bill until the House has adopted it.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, we are informed that the amendment is practically a new bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a new bill only in the sense that the amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute new language for the remainder of the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that the bill was subject to one objection last time, but to three this time, and only two objections were made to it today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington that the further reading of the committee amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the Record at this point.

There was no objection.

The remainder of the committee amendment follows:

Sec. 3. Upon creation of the national battlefield park the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(a) Allow monuments and memorials to be erected in the park by and to the various organizations and individuals of either the Union or Confederate Armies, subject to the written approval of said Secretary as to the location and character of such monuments and memorials.

(b) Make such regulations as are necessary from time to time for the care and protection of the park. Any person violating such regulations shall be guilty of an offense punishable by a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

(c) Provide for the ascertainment and marking of the route of march of the Union and Confederate Armies from Chattanooga, Tenn., through Georgia, and of principal battle lines, breastworks, fortifications, and other historical features along such route, and for the maintenance of such markers to such extent as deemed advisable and practicable.

Sec. 4. That the administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national battlefield park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

Sec. 5. The sum of $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purposes herein designated.

Sec. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, together with Senate amendments, disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, have the Republican members of the committee been consulted about this?

Mr. ARNOLD. I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that I would get the bill to conference as soon as I could, and that was agreeable to him.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, personally I think the policy of a former distinguished Democratic leader, when that party was in the minority, that the minority Members be consulted before these requests were made is a good policy to continue.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the Treasury-Post Office Department bill's going to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ARNOLD, LUDLOW, BOYLAN, GRANFIELD, O'NEAL, TABER, and McLEOD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1068, to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, concluded April 24, 1934.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act to establish a Commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934.

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a Commission to be known as the "Special Mexican Claims Commission" (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") which shall be composed of three commissioners, learned in the law, to be appointed by the President. Such Commission shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine, as hereinafter provided, conformable to the terms of the convention of September 10, 1923, and justice and equity, all claims against the Republic of Mexico, notices of which were filed with the Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by said convention of September 10, 1923, in which the said Commission failed to award compensation, except such claims as may be found by the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims and recognized as such by the General Claims Commission. For the purpose of this act, claims which were brought to the attention of the American agency charged with the prosecution of claims before the aforesaid Commission, prior to the expiration of the periods specified in the convention of September 10, 1923, for the filing of claims, but which, because of error or inadvertence, were not filed with or brought to the attention of the Commission within the said periods, shall be deemed to have been filed with the Commission within such periods.

(b) The President shall designate one of such commissioners as chairman of the Commission. Not more than two of such commissioners shall be members of the same political party. Each commissioner shall be a citizen of the United States, shall hold office until the functions of the Commission are terminated, and shall receive a salary at the rate of $7,500 a year. Any vacancy that may occur in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of an original appointment. Two members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of its business.

Sec. 2. The Commission shall have a secretary, and such additional legal, clerical, and technical assistants as may be approved and appointed by the Secretary of State, and at the rates of compensation fixed by him.

Sec. 3. (a) Before taking up his duties, each commissioner shall make and subscribe a solemn oath or declaration that he will carefully and impartially examine and decide all claims according to the best of his judgment and in accordance with the evidence and the applicable principles of justice and equity, and the terms of the said convention of September 10, 1923. All decisions by the Commission, which shall be by majority vote, shall constitute a full and final disposition of the cases decided. Such decisions shall be based upon the present records in the cases and such additional evidence and written legal contentions as may be presented within such period as may be prescribed therefor by the Commission.

(b) The Commission shall have authority, in its discretion, to make independent investigations of cases. For the purpose of all investigations which, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary and proper for carrying out the provisions of this act, each commissioner is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of books, papers, or other documents which the commissioner or the Commission deems relevant to the inquiry.

(c) Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpoena the Commission may invoke the aid of any district or territorial court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and the court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(d) For the purpose of assisting the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this act, the heads of the various departments and independent agencies and establishments of the Government are hereby directed to cooperate with the Commission and to place at its disposal such information as the Commission may from time to time request.

Sec. 4. If, after all claims have been passed upon and all awards have been entered, the Commission shall find that the total amount of such awards is greater than the amount that the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims, less expenses of the Commission, it shall reduce the awards on a percentage basis to such amount, and shall enter final awards in such reduced amounts.

Sec. 5. The said Commission shall perform its duties in the city of Washington, beginning within 15 days after its appointment. It shall, as soon as practicable, make all needful rules and regulations not contravening the laws of the United States, or the provisions of this act, for regulating the mode of procedure by and before it and for carrying into full and complete effect the provisions of this act; it shall also, as soon as practicable, notify all claimants of record of the establishment of the Commission and of the rules of procedure adopted by it for the adjudication of the claims, including the time allowed for the filing of additional evidence and written legal contentions.

Sec. 6. The Commission shall complete its work within 2 years from the date on which it undertakes the performance of its duties.

Sec. 7. The Commission shall be allowed the necessary actual expenses of office rent, furniture, stationery, books, printing and binding, and other necessary incidental expenses, to be certified as necessary by the Commission and approved by the Secretary of State.

Sec. 8. The Commission shall, at the time of entering an award on any claim, allow counsel or attorneys employed by the claimant or claimants, out of the amount awarded, such fees as it shall determine to be just and reasonable for the services rendered the claimant or claimants in prosecuting such claim, which allowance shall be entered as a part of said award: Provided, however, That the Commission shall determine just and reasonable fees, where there is a contract or agreement for services in connection with the proceedings before the Commission and with the preparations therefor, only upon the written request of the claimant or claimants, or of the counsel or attorneys, made to the Commission within 90 days after notice of the entry of an award and notice of the provisions of this section shall have been mailed by the Commission to the claimant or claimants; and payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the person or persons to whom such allowance shall be made in the same manner as payments are made to claimants under section 9 of this act, which shall constitute payment in full to the counsel or attorneys for prosecuting such claim; and whenever such allowance shall be made all other liens upon, or assignments, sales, or transfers of the claim or the award thereon, whether absolute or conditional, for services rendered or to be rendered by counsel or attorneys in the preparation or presentation of any claim or part or parcel thereof, shall be absolutely null and void and of no effect.

Sec. 9. The said Commission shall, upon the completion of its work, submit a report to the Secretary of State, attaching thereto the following documents in duplicate: (a) A statement of the expenses of the Commission; (b) a list of all claims rejected; (c) a list of all claims allowed in whole or in part, together with the amount of each claim and the amount awarded by the Commission; and (d) its decision in writing showing the reasons for the allowance or disallowance of the respective claims. Certified copies of lists (a) and (c) shall be transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, after making the deduction provided for in section 11 hereof, distribute in ratable proportions, among the persons in whose favor awards shall have been made, or their assignees, heirs, executors, or administrators of record, according to the proportions which their respective awards shall bear to the whole amount then available for distribution, such moneys as may have been received into the Treasury by virtue of the convention of April 24, 1934. The Secretary of the Treasury shall follow like procedure with reference to any amounts that may thereafter be received from the Government of Mexico under the convention of April 24, 1934.

Sec. 10. As soon as the adjudication of the claims shall have been completed, the records, books, documents, and all other papers in the possession of the Commission, or members of its staff, shall be deposited with the Department of State.

Sec. 11. For the expenses of the Commission in carrying out the duties as aforesaid, the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, including personal services in the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to the provisions of any statute relating to employment, rent in the District of Columbia, furniture, office supplies, and equipment, including law books and books of reference, stenographic reporting and translating services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; traveling expenses; printing and binding; and such other necessary expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State: Provided, That any expenditures from the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall become a first charge upon any moneys received from the Government of Mexico in settlement of these claims, and the amount of such expenditures shall be deducted from the first payment by the Government of Mexico and deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Sec. 12. After a fee has been fixed under section 8, any person accepting any consideration (whether or not under a contract or agreement entered into prior or subsequent to the enactment of this act) the aggregate value of which (when added to any consideration previously received) is in excess of the amount so fixed, for services in connection with the proceedings before the Commission, or any preparations therefor, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than four times the aggregate value of the consideration accepted by such person therefor.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 23, after the word "duties", add "at which time all powers, rights, and duties conferred by this act upon the commission shall terminate."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STAY OF ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5839, to authorize the shortening of the stay in the United States of certain aliens not admitted for permanent residence, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mrs. O'DAY, Mr. MARCANTONIO, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. WITHROW, and Mr. STEFAN objected.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR NATURALIZATION OF ALIEN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2739, to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CANNON]; at least, he was very much interested in this matter when we had it up for consideration on the last calendar day. I think an objection was made, or the bill was passed over without prejudice, with the agreement at that time that an amendment would be placed in the bill. The gentleman and I have agreed on what the amendment should be, and if it is all right I shall be glad to withdraw my reservation of objection, with the understanding that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What is the amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may not be offering the amendment at the right place, but I have the right meaning. The amendment is as follows:

Strike out the period in line 25 and add the following: "and that he was and had been a bona fide lawfully admitted resident in the United States for 2 years before the passage of this act."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the whole bill is based on the fact they are now residing here and have been residing here for 10 years or more, and participated in the World War. This just extends their time to be naturalized under a short-form naturalization. Now, what objection could there be to that procedure?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is in error in that respect. The gentleman knows that we have extended this period to the veterans time after time, and there has never been any opposition heretofore. This bill is directed especially to the benefit of a group of Polish veterans, and there is no inclination on the part of anyone to object to that part of it. On the contrary, I want especially to help them. As far as I am concerned, and as far as I know, the recommendations have been overwhelmingly in favor of that part of the bill, but there is a thread running through the bill which seeks to provide that they must be residents of this country. It is strictly a bill for the benefit of aliens who fought for our country. In that respect it should be held strictly as a bill in favor of veterans and will not be permitted to be an immigration matter. My amendment will not in any way militate against the real purpose of the bill. It will strengthen it.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. I understand the amendment is satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. There were a lot of boys of Mexican extraction that were in the United States Army and who always thought they were citizens of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the sentiment of this Congress is overwhelmingly in favor of any proposition that assists veterans to become citizens. However, there is a loophole in this bill that would allow a lot of people to come in under one guise or another and the veterans would not be in favor of that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say to the gentleman that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other patriotic organizations came before the committee and endorsed the language of this bill. There is not one alien that will come in here. This has nothing to do with immigration. The men who served in the war must be residents and permanently admitted to the United States, and they must have been in this country 14 years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understand that is what the bill tends to do.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then why stick in an amendment that is going to destroy this piece of legislation? The gentleman is cutting off the legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. If the gentleman agrees to my amendment, there will be no difficulty. Does the gentleman agree to my amendment?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I do not agree to it because it is nonsensical.

Mr. KENNEY. I think the bill as written virtually carries out the idea that the gentleman has in mind. If there is likely to be an objection, perhaps the bill should be passed over.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I make this suggestion: In order to be absolutely sure what we are doing here, I will be glad to pass the bill over at this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. We might as well dispose of it now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is up to the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT demanded the regular order.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want this thing done right and the gentleman wants it done right.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I say it is being done right in this bill as it is written.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. Speaker, on page 2, section 2 provides that persons must be legally admitted to the United States. They cannot come in under any other conditions at all. They are here. They must have served in the World War. This simply extends the courtesy to become naturalized under a short-form naturalization process. It is endorsed by everyone who came before the committee. What amendment does the gentleman want to put in?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have been telling the gentleman. I read my proposed amendment, but the gentleman probably did not hear it. All I want to do is to put the language in this bill that it shall apply to veterans who are here. That is what the American Legion wants and that is what everybody wants. If there is a loophole in it, and it looks as if there is, or the gentleman would not be so persistent, let us straighten it out.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will accept the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding my amendment will be accepted, I withdraw my reservation of objection and will permit the bill to be read.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to further amend the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 8, sec. 392b (a)), shall continue in force and effect to include petitions for citizenship filed prior to May 25, 1936, with any court having naturalization jurisdiction.

Sec. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act are hereby extended to include any alien lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence who departed therefrom between August —, 1914, and April 5, 1917, or who, having been denied entry into the military and naval forces of the United States, departed therefrom subsequent to April 5, 1917, for the purpose of serving, and actually served prior to November 11, 1918, in the military or naval forces of any of the countries allied with the United States in the World War and was discharged from such service under honorable circumstances: Provided, That before any applicant for citizenship under this section is admitted to citizenship, the court shall be satisfied by competent proof that he is entitled to, and has complied in all respects with, the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "shall", insert the words "as herein amended."

And on page 2, line 1, after the word "jurisdiction", insert the following:

"Provided, That for the purposes of this act clause (1) of subdivision (a) of section 1 of the aforesaid act of May 25, 1932, is amended by striking out the words 'all such period' and in lieu thereof inserting the words 'the 5 years immediately preceding the filing of his petition.'"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: On page 2, line 21, after the word "act", strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "and that he was and had been a bona fide lawfully admitted resident in the United States for 2 years before the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSENT CALENDAR

LOSS OF UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5799, to declare that a citizen of the United States who votes in a political election in a foreign state loses his citizenship.

Mr. WITHROW, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

PACIFIC EXPOSITION OF 1938 AT LOS ANGELES

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 164, authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pacific Exposition of 1938 at Los Angeles, Calif.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GROVER CLEVELAND

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 147, authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland in Washington, D. C.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over until the Chairman of the Library Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], is present, to be returned to upon his return. I do this at the request of the Chairman of the Library Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

REPATRIATION OF NATIVE-BORN WOMEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4354, to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CUSTODY OF FEDERAL PROCLAMATIONS, ORDERS, REGULATIONS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6323, to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I discussed with the author of this measure, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], an amendment to this bill, and the amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from New York.

I would propose to strike out in line 9, on page 1, the words "there shall be at the head of the" and then strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 on page 2.

I am informed that this work can be well handled by the present Assistant Director of Archives and will require no additional appropriation or no authorization by the President with respect to the appointment of a new director to handle the work.

Mr. CELLER. I thought we had agreed only that the salary of $6,000 would be stricken out. I agreed, however, most reluctantly and, indeed, not from choice, but simply to get the bill considered and not to have objections voiced against the bill. In view of the importance of the work to be done under the bill, I do hope the gentleman will not press his objection to the appointment of a director of division to handle this work. A tremendous task will be thrust upon such a gentleman. This position will require a great deal of skill and knowledge of law and codification. I understood the gentleman's main objection was to the salary that would be paid. The work probably could be conferred upon an assistant in the Archives Bureau, who might already have been appointed, and this would be among his tasks and duties, but to strike out the whole provision would destroy the symmetry of the bill, because in other places we mention a Director of Division. I do hope the gentleman will not press the striking out of all the words he has indicated.

Mr. TRUAX. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the section remaining in the bill a new appointee could be appointed and receive a salary of, say, $10,000 a year. There is absolutely no protection there; and I would also remind the gentleman that 1 year ago, when we passed a bill which, as I recall, was on the Consent Calendar, authorizing the appointment of a Director of Archives, at a salary of $10,000 per year, I made the assertion that it would seem fair if we could select some one of the 70,000 employees already on the pay roll in Washington without importing a new man to handle this work.

Mr. CELLER. I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman's endeavor to save money for the Government, but, as I have stated, in view of the fact that in other parts of the bill we mention a Director of Division, for example, at page 5, line 21, where the words "Director of the Division" are used, the whole fabric of the bill is sort of built around a Director of Division together with an appointee of the Attorney General and an appointee of the Government Printer. Strike out all the gentleman wants and you do much to destroy the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment stating "no other salary than those already provided for"?

Mr. CELLER. In view of the importance of the bill I would be in the position of being compelled to take the half loaf if I could not get the full loaf and I would be agreeable to that request, although again I yield most reluctantly.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in the discussion and particularly interested in the bill. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that this bill sets up an entirely distinct and separate feature in the Archives establishment, different from anything contemplated in the original Archives Act. It seems to me if we are going to get any benefit out of this measure, and we ought to get great benefit out of it, there should be some person specially selected whose duties and responsibilities would be the carrying out of the provisions of this bill alone, in no way connected with the preservation of the national archives.

Mr. TRUAX. I understand there is already employed a gentleman who is qualified to handle this particular work.

Mr. WOODRUM. If he is in the Archives establishment now he is receiving other pay, and I may say that if we are to get the full benefits of this bill there ought to be someone assigned to do this particular work. I know it has been the gentleman's experience as a legislator that if you want a good job done you have got to get a good man to do it and it cannot be done for nothing.

Mr. TRUAX. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. WOODRUM. There are no funds in the appropriation for the Archives establishment for this particular work.

Some slight portion of it undoubtedly will be duplication and can be carried on by the regular force, but this bill, of course, will call for some additional force.

Mr. TRUAX. May I say to the gentleman from Virginia, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has already agreed to the striking out of all of line 5 and part of line 4, with the intention that if the position can be taken care of by the present personnel, without any extra salary or appropriation, it will be done.

Mr. WOODRUM. That, of course, is agreeable to me. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has done pioneer work on the bill, and I readily accede to anything that is agreeable to him.

Mr. CELLER. I agree, provided we do not strike out "Director of Division"; but I yield most grudgingly and hope the gentleman will not press his suggestion.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I think the position ought to be left in the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX], he is familiar, of course, with the fact that the demand for this particular legislation has grown out of the fact that an enormous number of rules and regulations have been issued about which nothing has been known by the public at the time.

That is the cause of the immediate demand for legislation. We sought to bring about an arrangement under which rules and regulations will be given to the public and thereby given actual notice instead of mere constructive notice.

Then there is the matter of taking care of the archives. I call my friend's attention to the fact that the language in sections 4 and 5 is, as a matter of fact, language of limitation on any lump sum. The compensation cannot exceed $6,000. I am not familiar with the general legislation as to lump-sum appropriations, but if that language fixing the maximum at $6,000 is stricken out it might be possible that the salary would be fixed in excess of $6,000.

Mr. TRUAX. I made that observation a while ago.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To be frank with the gentleman, the bill came to the Committee on the Judiciary from the Department of Justice. It was prepared by those who had charge of this particular activity, and the amount of salary provided for originally was $7,500.

The committee went into the matter very thoroughly and felt that the compensation should not exceed $6,000—that that would be enough compensation to put in the bill. It did not say that the salary must be $6,000 but not more than $6,000.

Personally, I am apprehensive that to strike out the language in the bill would be to strike out the limitation. We did not know whether they could get a man for a less amount of money who was qualified, and we did not want to pay him any more than that. I hope my friend will not insist on striking it out.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think that somebody might be obtained who was well qualified for four or five thousand dollars? I think we have a lot of such persons in the State of Ohio well qualified for the job.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my former amendment and offer another in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

A bill to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof

Be it enacted, etc., That the Archivist of the United States, acting through a division established by him in the National Archives Establishment, hereinafter referred to as the "Division", is charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under section 5.

There shall be at the head of the Division, a director, appointed by the President, who shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder, who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year.

Sec. 2. The original and two duplicate originals or certified copies of any document required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be filed with the Division, which shall be open at all hours for that purpose. The Director of the Division shall cause to be noted on the original and duplicate originals or certified copies of each document the day and hour of filing thereof: Provided, That when the original is issued, prescribed, or promulgated outside of the District of Columbia and certified copies are filed before the filing of the original, the notation shall be of the day and hour of filing of the certified copies. Upon such filing, at least one copy shall be immediately available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Division. The original shall be retained in the archives of the National Archives Establishment and shall be available for inspection under regulations to be prescribed by the Archivist. The Division shall transmit immediately to the Government Printing Office for printing, as provided in this act, one duplicate original or certified copy of each document required or authorized to be published under section 5. Every Federal agency shall cause to be transmitted for filing as herein required the original and the duplicate originals or certified copies of all such documents issued, prescribed, or promulgated by the agency.

Sec. 3. All documents required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be printed and distributed forthwith by the Government Printing Office in a serial publication designated the "Federal Register." It shall be the duty of the Public Printer to make available the facilities of the Government Printing Office for the prompt printing and distribution of the Federal Register in the manner and at the times required by the Archivist in accordance with the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder. The contents of the daily issues shall be indexed and shall comprise all documents, required or authorized to be published, filed with the division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by regulations hereunder. There shall be printed with each document a copy of the notation, required to be made under section 2, of the day and hour when, upon filing with the division, such document was made available for public inspection. Distribution shall be made by delivery or by deposit at a post office at such time in the morning of the day of distribution as shall be fixed by such regulations prescribed hereunder. The prices to be charged for the Federal Register may be fixed by the administrative committee established by section 6 without reference to the restrictions placed upon and fixed for the sale of Government publications by section 1 of the act of May 11, 1922, and section 307 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 72 and 72a), and any amendments thereto.

Sec. 4. As used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "document" means any Presidential proclamation or Executive order and any order, regulation, rule, certificate, code of fair competition, license, notice, or similar instrument issued, prescribed, or promulgated by a Federal agency; the terms "Federal agency" or "agency" mean the President of the United States, or any executive department, independent board, establishment, bureau, agency, institution, commission, or separate office of the administrative branch of the Government of the United States but not the legislative or judicial branches of the Government; and the term "person" means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

Sec. 5. (a) There shall be published in the Federal Register (1) all Presidential proclamations and Executive orders, except such as have no general applicability and legal effect or are effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof; (2) such documents or classes of documents as the President shall determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect; and (3) such documents or classes of documents as may be required so to be published by act of the Congress: Provided, That for the purposes of this act every document or order which shall prescribe a penalty shall be deemed to have general applicability and legal effect.

(b) In addition to the foregoing there shall also be published in the Federal Register such other documents or classes of documents as may be authorized to be published pursuant hereto by regulations prescribed hereunder with the approval of the President, but in no case shall comments or news items of any character whatsoever be authorized to be published in the Federal Register.

Sec. 6. There is established a permanent Administrative Committee, of three members, consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, who shall be chairman, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer. The Director of the Division shall act as secretary of the committee. The committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act. Such regulations shall provide, among other things: (a) The manner of certification of copies required to be certified under section 2, which certification may be permitted to be based upon confirmed communications from outside of the District of Columbia; (b) the documents which shall be authorized pursuant to section 5 (b) to be published in the Federal Register; (c) the manner and form in which the Federal Register shall be printed, reprinted, compiled, indexed, bound, and distributed; (d) the number of copies of the Federal Register which shall be printed, reprinted, and compiled, the number which shall be distributed without charge to Members of Congress, officers and employees of the United States, or any Federal agency for their official use, and the number which shall be available for distribution to the public; and (e) the prices to be charged for individual copies of, and subscriptions to, the Federal Register and reprints and bound volumes thereof.

Sec. 7. No document required under section 5 (a) to be published in the Federal Register shall be effective as against any person who has not had actual knowledge thereof until the duplicate originals or certified copies of the document shall have been filed with the division and a copy made available for public inspection as provided in section 2; and, unless otherwise specifically provided by statute, such filing of any document, required or authorized to be published under section 5, shall, except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, be sufficient to give notice of the contents of such document to any person subject thereto or affected thereby. The publication in the Federal Register of any document shall create a rebuttable presumption (a) that it was duly issued, prescribed, or promulgated; (b) that it was duly filed with the Division and made available for public inspection at the day and hour stated in the printed notation; (c) that the copy contained in the Federal Register is a true copy of the original; and (d) that all requirements of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder relative to such document have been complied with. The contents of the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed and, without prejudice to any other mode of citation, may be cited by volume and page number.

Sec. 8. Whenever notice of hearing or of opportunity to be heard is required or authorized to be given by or under an act of the Congress, or may otherwise properly be given, the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, if said notice shall be published in the Federal Register at such time that the period between the publication and the date fixed in such notice for the hearing or for the termination of the opportunity to be heard shall be (a) not less than the time specifically prescribed for the publication of the notice by the appropriate act of the Congress; or (b) not less than 15 days when no time for publication is specifically prescribed by the act, without prejudice, however, to the effectiveness of any notice of less than 15 days where such shorter period is reasonable.

Sec. 9. Every payment made for the Federal Register shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The cost of printing, reprinting, wrapping, binding, and distributing the Federal Register and any other expenses incurred by the Government Printing Office in carrying out the duties placed upon it by this act shall be borne by the general appropriation to the Government Printing Office and such appropriation is hereby made available, and is authorized to be increased by an amount equal to the amount so covered into the Treasury and such additional sums as are necessary, for such purposes. The purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this act. Copies of the Federal Register mailed by the Government shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the official mail of the executive departments of the Government. The cost of mailing the Federal Register to officers and employees of Federal agencies in foreign countries shall be borne by the respective agencies.

Sec. 10. The provisions of section 2 shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this act and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter. The limitations upon the effectiveness of documents required, under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall not be operative as to any document issued, prescribed, or promulgated prior to the date when such document is first required by this or subsequent act of the Congress or by Executive order to be published in the Federal Register.

Sec. 11. Within 6 months after the approval of this act each agency shall prepare and file with the committee a complete compilation of all documents which have been issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by this act to be published in the Federal Register and which are still in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities. The committee shall, within 60 days thereafter, report with respect thereto to the President, who shall determine which of such documents have general applicability and legal effect, and shall authorize the publication thereof in a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register. Such special or supplemental editions or issues shall be distributed in the same manner as regular editions or issues, and shall be included in the bound volumes of the Federal Register as supplements thereto.

Sec. 12. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements or proclamations thereof by the President.

Sec. 13. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed insofar as they conflict herewith.

Sec. 14. This act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "hereunder", strike out the following: "who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer a substitute amendment on the same point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I repeat the statement I made a while ago. One year ago, when the bill authorizing the creation of this new position of Superintendent of Archives was under consideration, I said then it was not necessary to import a specialist to handle this job at a salary of $10,000 a year, nor is it necessary today to import a specialist at a salary of $6,000 a year to handle this particular job. It seems to me that with all of the thousands of employees who are employed alone in the Government Printing Office, there should be found one man, or perhaps a woman, eminently qualified for this position at a salary perhaps of three or four thousand dollars a year. One of the pledges of our party in that historic convention held in Chicago in 1932 was a solemn promise to the people of this country to cut down bureaucracy and reduce bureaucratic expense. If I recall that convention correctly, we pledged in our party platform a reduction of at least 25 percent of the bureaucratic expenses of this Nation. Instead of that, we have increased vastly the positions now being held by the bureaucrats and the salaries that they are drawing.

I am informed that the main controversy in the adoption of the report of the conferees on the public-works relief bill is because of the objections of Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, to an amendment adopted by the Senate which provides that one-third of $900,000,000 shall be spent directly for labor. I was one of the few Democrats who voted "no" on the motion to recommit that conference report to the conference committee. I voted "no" because I am opposed unalterably to any further usurpation of bureaucratic power by Mr. Ickes, Mr. Hopkins, or any of the other "four horsemen."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. TABER. If they would repeal the N. R. A. and A. A. A. and a few of those rackets, we would not need this bill at all.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I do not favor the repeal of the N. R. A., because it contains provisions that are beneficial to American labor, such as the abolition of child labor, the outlawing of "yellow dog" contracts, and the right of labor to collective bargaining. There is much more good in the N. R. A. than there is bad, and therefore I favor, and shall vote for, its retention.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And I think the gentleman is in accord with me, that the interpretation of the labor provisions of the N. R. A. have been against labor, and those interpretations are being used to regiment labor to a low standard of living.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the gentleman's statement. I sit on the Committee on Labor with the gentleman. We had Mr. Richberg testify before our committee and we have legislation now in our committee which we have reported favorably for passage that will correct that situation and make section 7 (a) what it is intended to be, a protection for the rights of American labor.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman please get back to the bill that we are discussing.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And tell us what he thinks about that amendment which he has suggested.

Mr. TRUAX. My amendment?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I am for it 100 percent. I think it should be adopted by the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Following the gentleman's views, does he not think that we should go a little further and put the employees of this new bureau under civil service. If we did that, then we could find a person at the salary the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean by putting them under civil service that that will mean Republican appointments by the Republican bureaucrats?

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, no.

Mr. TRUAX. That has been my experience. I have found that many times whenever you place employees under civil service, it means the appointment of Republicans, regardless of merit.

Mr. MICHENER. The only way that that could be possibly true would be because only Republicans are competent.

Mr. TRUAX. I ask the Members of this House to adopt this amendment. It eliminates the necessity for going out into some other State, possibly New York, and importing a specialist at a salary of $6,000 a year, when we have men right in the departments here who are well qualified and have all the specialization that is necessary to handle the job.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I sympathize thoroughly with the aims and aspirations of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] to keep down expenditures for the operations of various bureaus and departments of the Government. Unfortunately, the gentleman from Ohio injected into his remarks matters that are extraneous to the subject at hand. This bill has nothing to do with the usurpation of bureaucratic power and other and sundry items the gentleman adverted to. I rise to call the attention of Members of the House to the importance of this legislation.

In the first 15 months after March 4, 1933, the President alone issued 674 Executive orders, aggregating approximately 1,400 pages. This was a greater volume than that of the preceding 4 years, and nearly six times as great as that for the 39 years from 1862 through 1900. Moreover, in the first year of the National Recovery Administration 2,998 administrative orders were issued. In addition to these, the N. R. A. has adopted numerous regulations and sets of regulations which can only be found after a search through some 5,991 press releases issued during this period. It is estimated that the N. R. A. alone issued in all some 10,000 pages of "law"—a greater volume than the total amount of statute law contained in the United States Code.

Aside from the tremendous number of rules and regulations issued by the National Recovery Administration and the great activity by the President in the promulgation of his Executive orders, there are the many other departments and officials adding to the avalanche of executive orders, decrees, regulations, notices, and codes. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has issued many series of regulations, some of them most complicated by amendments and supplements. There are customs regulations, internal-revenue regulations, immigration rules and regulations, and postal rules and regulations, comprising several volumes, frequently amended. The Veterans' Bureau has issued two large volumes of regulations; much of the data are already out of date. There is an elaborate series of regulations under the Pure Food and Drugs Act. Pretty soon the new boards and new commissions, like the Federal Communications Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission, will issue their myriad of executive legislation. We have mentioned only a few of the bureaus. There are literally dozens of agencies with powers to publish rules and regulations. Ofttimes these rules and regulations prescribe penalties. It is difficult at times to find out what they are. Yet the property and persons of the citizens may be at stake.

The enactments of Congress are easily available, but often the regulations issued under them are more important than the basic acts. But these administrative rules and pronouncements oftentimes cannot be found. As to their publication and distribution, there is utter chaos. These rules and regulations frequently appear in separate paper pamphlets, some printed on single sheets of paper and easily lost. Any attempt to compile a complete private collection of these rules and regulations would be wellnigh impossible. No law library, public or private, contains them all. Officials of the department issuing them frequently do not know all of their own regulations. Recently, as has been pointed out by Prof. Erwin N. Griswold, of the Harvard Law School, in an article in the December 1934 issue of the Harvard Law Review, entitled "Government in Ignorance of the Law—A Plea for Better Publication of Executive Legislation", an indictment was brought and an appeal was taken by the Government to the Supreme Court before it was discovered that the regulation on which the proceeding was based did not exist. (See United States v. Smith, no. 3, October term, 1934; appeal dismissed on motion of the appellant, Oct. 1, 1934. See New York Times, Oct. 2, 1934, at p. 6.)

A committee of the American Bar Association has this to say on the subject:

The practice of filing Executive orders with the Department of State is not uniformly or regularly followed, and the totals are really greater than above indicated. Some orders are retained or buried in the files of the Government departments, some are confidential and are not published, and the practice as to printing and publication of orders is not uniform. Some orders are made known and available rather promptly after their approval; the publication of others may be delayed a month or more, with consequent confusion in numbering. The comparatively large number of recent orders which incorporate provisions purporting to impose criminal penalties by way of fine and imprisonment for violation is without numerical precedent in the history of the Government.

Such chaos and disorder concerning statutory rules and regulations demands an immediate solution. H. R. 6323 provides such solution. There shall be an official publication called the "Federal Register", in which all rules and regulations shall systematically and uniformly be published, and such Federal Register shall be readily accessible to all parties interested. There shall be available for public use indices and tabulations of such rules and regulations.

There is not an enlightened country in the world that has not legislation of this character. I have taken the trouble to go through many volumes to discover what England does, what Canada does, and the South American countries, and France, India, New Zealand, and South Africa. They all have legislation of this character and they have had it for years. A bill of this character was passed by the English Parliament as far back as 1890. The London Gazette is the English publication corresponding to the Federal Register set up in my bill. When you recollect that there are these 11,000 pages of rules and regulations promulgated by the N. R. A.—and very few people know what they are or where they are—you will have some idea of the size of this job. Suppose any one of you had to codify and rearrange that vast amount of administrative law. You would have your hands full.

In some departments these rules and regulations take the form of mimeographed blanks, they take the form of telegraph blanks, yet many of those so-called "rules and regulations", so improperly promulgated, carry with them penalties threatening your liberties. Take the huge amount of rules and regulations issued by the Veterans' Bureau and a similar number issued by the Post Office Department, the S. E. C., the R. F. C., the A. A. A., the F. E. R. A., the C. C. C., H. O. L. C., and so forth. Where they are and what they are the Lord only knows. It takes a Sabbath-day journey to find a few of them, yet we know that these rules and regulations are far more important than the basic acts that we pass in this House. See how lax we have been? Shall that laxity continue?

Keep in mind that anomalous situation that arose in Texas when a man was arrested and indicted for an alleged violation of a regulation which had been repealed prior to the date of the alleged offense. Yet nobody connected with the Petroleum Code knew anything about the repeal of the regulation. The United States attorney knew nothing about it. The great Department of Justice had to move to dismiss the case.

Such proceedings make us look ridiculous. It shall not happen again. My bill is the safeguard.

Now is the time to call a halt. We should have some means by which the whole Nation may be apprised of rules and regulations promulgated, many of which carry criminal penalties, so that you and I will be safe from arrest for violating something which does not even exist.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think this will in any way encourage the continuation of legislation in that manner?

Mr. CELLER. My bill will prevent it. I think it would discourage also the so-called "wild cat" legislation by rule and regulation. Heads of bureaus will think twice and most carefully before promulgating rules. This bill has two purposes. It provides for the codification of all past rules and regulations and proper promulgation of rules and regulations in the future, and the custody of those rules and regulations in the proper place is assured, after certain notice, so that you and I may know where to find them and what they are. They will be under a division composed of a member of the Archives Department, a member of the Department of Justice, and the Government Printing Office.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman ought to give consideration to the fact that there are other important bills on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. I will not use the 5 minutes.

There must be a specialist employed to supervise this work. It requires much acumen, intelligence, and skill. Originally we wanted to place this whole thing in the Library of Congress, but we found the Librarian had not the facilities to handle the situation. We wanted to save the money which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUXAX] is anxious about. We then had arranged to let the Department of Justice handle it exclusively. The Attorney General said they had no facilities. We went to the Bureau of Archives, and they said they would be glad to handle it, provided we would get a man skillful enough, well grounded, and highly intelligent, and who had a ready knowledge of departmental work. If you are going to reduce the amount of salary which we originally placed at $7,500 in the bill, down to three or four thousand dollars, you will not get the proper man to handle this work. I hope you will not reduce the salary to such a low extent that you will not get the proper talent to take care of this work. I believe $6,000 is the proper amount.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. It is true that an ordinary clerk of a small court or the clerk of a city or town receives in the vicinity of three or four or five thousand dollars a year salary for the type of work he does?

Mr. CELLER. That is true.

Mr. HEALEY. And this man will have all of these very valuable documents, affecting all of the people in our country and our Government, under his jurisdiction?

Mr. CELLER. That is true.

Herewith I give you a synopsis of the bill by sections:

Section 1 provides that the Archivist of the United States shall be charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under the provisions of the bill. This section further provides that the provisions of the bill shall be carried out under the supervision of a director, appointed by the President, who in turn shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States.

Section 3 provides for the printing and distribution by the Government Printing Office of a serial publication designated the "Federal Register", to be distributed daily except Sundays, Mondays, and days following legal holidays. It is further provided in section 3 that the contents of the daily issue shall comprise all documents filed with the Division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by the regulations. The method of distribution of, and the prices to be charged for, the Federal Register are also provided for in section 3.

Section 4 sets forth the documents required or authorized to be filed in the Division and to be published in the Federal Register.

Section 5 (a) makes specification as to which Presidential proclamations and Executive orders shall be published in the Federal Register, as well as to which document or classes of documents are to be published.

Section 5 (b) further provides for the publication in the Register of certain other documents or classes of documents.

Section 6 provides for the establishment of a permanent administrative committee of three members, which committee, consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer, shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of the bill. The provisions of such regulations are also set forth in section 6.

Section 7 provides that the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed.

Section 8 provides that publication in the Federal Register shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law.

Section 9 provides that the purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this bill.

Section 10 provides that the provisions of section 2 of this bill shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this bill and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter.

Section 11 makes provision for and sets forth rules governing the publication of a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register.

Section 12 excludes treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements or proclamations thereof by the President from the provisions of this bill.

Section 13 provides that all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are repealed insofar as they conflict therewith.

Section 14 provides that this act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 2, line 5, strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The only reason I do this is to let the House say whether they will limit the salary to $5,000 or $6,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUXAX].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof

Be it enacted, etc., That the Archivist of the United States, acting through a division established by him in the National Archives Establishment, hereinafter referred to as the "Division", is charged with the custody and, together with the Public Printer, with the prompt and uniform printing and distribution of the documents required or authorized to be published under section 5. There shall be at the head of the Division a director, appointed by the President, who shall act under the general direction of the Archivist of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder, who shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, not to exceed $6,000 a year.

SEC. 2. The original and two duplicate originals or certified copies of any document required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be filed with the Division, which shall be open at all hours for that purpose. The Director of the Division shall cause to be noted on the original and duplicate originals or certified copies of each document the day and hour of filing thereof: Provided, That when the original is issued, prescribed, or promulgated outside of the District of Columbia and certified copies are filed before the filing of the original, the notation shall be of the day and hour of filing of the certified copies. Upon such filing, at least one copy shall be immediately available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the Division. The original shall be retained in the archives of the National Archives Establishment and shall be available for inspection under regulations to be prescribed by the Archivist. The Division shall transmit immediately to the Government Printing Office for printing, as provided in this act, one duplicate original or certified copy of each document required or authorized to be published under section 5. Every Federal agency shall cause to be transmitted for filing as herein required the original and the duplicate originals or certified copies of all such documents issued, prescribed, or promulgated by the agency.

SEC. 3. All documents required or authorized to be published under section 5 shall be printed and distributed forthwith by the Government Printing Office in a serial publication designated the "Federal Register." It shall be the duty of the Public Printer to make available the facilities of the Government Printing Office for the prompt printing and distribution of the Federal Register in the manner and at the times required by the Archivist in accordance with the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder. The contents of the daily issues shall be indexed and shall comprise all documents, required or authorized to be published, filed with the Division up to such time of the day immediately preceding the day of distribution as shall be fixed by regulations hereunder. There shall be printed with each document a copy of the notation, required to be made under section 2, of the day and hour when, upon filing with the Division, such document was made available for public inspection. Distribution shall be made by delivery or by deposit at a post office at such time in the morning of the day of distribution as shall be fixed by such regulations prescribed hereunder. The prices to be charged for the Federal Register may be fixed by the administrative committee established by section 6 without reference to the restrictions placed upon and fixed for the sale of Government publications by section 1 of the act of May 11, 1922, and section 307 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., title 44, secs. 72 and 72a), and any amendments thereto.

SEC. 4. As used in this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "document" means any Presidential proclamation or Executive order and any order, regulation, rule, certificate, code of fair competition, license, notice, or similar instrument issued, prescribed, or promulgated by a Federal agency; the terms "Federal agency" or "agency" mean the President of the United States, or any executive department, independent board, establishment, bureau, agency, institution, commission, or separate office of the administrative branch of the Government of the United States but not the legislative or judicial branches of the Government; and the term "person" means any individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

SEC. 5. (a) There shall be published in the Federal Register (1) all Presidential proclamations and Executive orders, except such as have no general applicability and legal effect or are effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof; (2) such documents or classes of documents as the President shall determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect; and (3) such documents or classes of documents as may be required so to be published by act of the Congress: Provided, That for the purposes of this act every document or order which shall prescribe a penalty shall be deemed to have general applicability and legal effect.

(b) In addition to the foregoing there shall also be published in the Federal Register such other documents or classes of documents as may be authorized to be published pursuant hereto by regulations prescribed hereunder with the approval of the President, but in no case shall comments or news items of any character whatsoever be authorized to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 6. There is established a permanent Administrative Committee of three members consisting of the Archivist or Acting Archivist, who shall be chairman, an officer of the Department of Justice designated by the Attorney General, and the Public Printer or Acting Public Printer. The director of the division shall act as secretary of the committee. The committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act. Such regulations shall provide, among other things: (a) The manner of certification of copies required to be certified under section 2, which certification may be permitted to be based upon confirmed communications from outside of the District of Columbia; (b) the documents which shall be authorized pursuant to section 5 (b) to be published in the Federal Register; (c) the manner and form in which the Federal Register shall be printed, reprinted, compiled, indexed, bound, and distributed; (d) the number of copies of the Federal Register which shall be printed, reprinted, and compiled, the number which shall be distributed without charge to Members of Congress, officers and employees of the United States, or any Federal agency for their official use, and the number which shall be available for distribution to the public; and (e) the prices to be charged for individual copies of, and subscriptions to, the Federal Register and reprints and bound volumes thereof.

SEC. 7. No document required under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall be effective as against any person who has not had actual knowledge thereof until the duplicate originals or certified copies of the document shall have been filed with the division and a copy made available for public inspection as provided in section 2; and, unless otherwise specifically provided by statute, such filing of any document, required or authorized to be published under section 5, shall, except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, be sufficient to give notice of the contents of such document to any person subject thereto or affected thereby. The publication in the Federal Register of any document shall create a rebuttable presumption (a) that it was duly issued, prescribed, or promulgated; (b) that it was duly filed with the division and made available for public inspection at the day and hour stated in the printed notation; (c) that the copy contained in the Federal Register is a true copy of the original; and, (d) that all requirements of this act and the regulations prescribed hereunder relative to such document have been complied with. The contents of the Federal Register shall be judicially noticed and, without prejudice to any other mode of citation, may be cited by volume and page number.

SEC. 8. Whenever notice of hearing or of opportunity to be heard is required or authorized to be given by or under an act of the Congress, or may otherwise properly be given, the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons residing within the continental United States (not including Alaska), except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, if said notice shall be published in the Federal Register at such time that the period between the publication and the date fixed in such notice for the hearing or for the termination of the opportunity to be heard shall be (a) not less than the time specifically prescribed for the publication of the notice by the appropriate act of the Congress; or (b) not less than 15 days when no time for publication is specifically prescribed by the act, without prejudice, however, to the effectiveness of any notice of less than 15 days where such shorter period is reasonable.

SEC. 9. Every payment made for the Federal Register shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. The cost of printing, reprinting, wrapping, binding, and distributing the Federal Register and any other expenses incurred by the Government Printing Office in carrying out the duties placed upon it by this act shall be borne by the general appropriation to the Government Printing Office and such appropriation is hereby made available, and is authorized to be increased by an amount equal to the amount so covered into the Treasury and such additional sums as are necessary, for such purposes. The purposes for which appropriations are available and are authorized to be made under section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 1122) are enlarged to cover the additional duties placed upon the National Archives Establishment by the provisions of this act. Copies of the Federal Register mailed by the Government shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the official mail of the executive departments of the Government. The cost of mailing the Federal Register to officers and employees of Federal agencies in foreign countries shall be borne by the respective agencies.

SEC. 10. The provisions of section 2 shall become effective 60 days after the date of approval of this act and the publication of the Federal Register shall begin within 3 business days thereafter. The limitations upon the effectiveness of documents required, under section 5 (a), to be published in the Federal Register shall not be operative as to any document issued, prescribed, or promulgated prior to the date when such document is first required by this or subsequent act of the Congress or by Executive order to be published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 11. Within 6 months after the approval of this act each agency shall prepare and file with the committee a complete compilation of all documents which have been issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by this act to be published in the Federal Register and which are still in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities. The committee shall within 60 days thereafter report with respect thereto to the President, who shall determine which of such documents have general applicability and legal effect, and shall authorize the publication thereof in a special or supplemental edition or issue of the Federal Register. Such special or supplemental editions or issues shall be distributed in the same manner as regular editions or issues, and shall be included in the bound volumes of the Federal Register as supplements thereto.

SEC. 12. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to treaties, conventions, protocols, and other international agreements, or proclamations thereof by the President.

SEC. 13. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed insofar as they conflict herewith.

SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the "Federal Register Act."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 6359) relating to repeal of publicity of income-tax returns has been sent to conference and the conferees will meet in the near future to consider the Senate amendment.

As there has been no opportunity to debate the amendment in the House I wish to call attention to its importance and to express the hope that the House conferees will recede and agree to it in conference.

The Senate amendment provides:

(1) All returns filed under this title shall be open to examination by any official, body, or commission of any State or political subdivision thereof lawfully charged with the administration of any State or local tax laws and while engaged in the performance of official duties. Such examination shall be made in a manner prescribed by the Commissioner and approved by the Secretary.

(2) Any information thus secured by an official, body, or commission of any State or political subdivision thereof shall be used only in connection with the administration of State or local tax laws and for no other purpose. Any such official or employee or agent of any such body or commission who divulges, except in the performance of his official duties, or when called upon to testify in any court or official proceedings, any information acquired by him through examination of said income-tax returns, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $1,000.

This is a most salutary provision, Mr. Speaker. While protecting the returns from scrutiny by the general public as provided by the House bill it affords the tax authorities of States which impose a State income tax an opportunity to compare State and Federal returns, and thereby discourages evasion of the State law and insures a maximum State revenue from this source.

The importance of this provision is indicated by the fact that in my own State inspection of Federal income-tax returns by the State taxing authorities brought in an additional $400,000 to the State of Missouri last year which otherwise would not have been collected. The Senate amendment, while affording ample protection from unofficial inspection, is the most effective aid in the enforcement of State income-tax laws that could be enacted. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the crying fiscal need of the States today is revenue with which to match Federal contributions—contributions for Federal relief, contributions for old-age pensions, contributions for the building of State roads, contributions to insure the maintenance of our schools and equal educational facilities to the children of every American citizen. There is hardly a State in the Union that is not hard pressed for funds to finance one or all of these essential activities, and agreement by the House conferees to the Senate amendment will do more to care for the aged and the needy, to relieve unemployment and to provide for the proper training of the next generation than anything else that could be done in this connection.

A provision of this character, contributing to the enforcement of State income-tax laws, will to that extent protect the consumer against the necessity for the imposition of irksome and burdensome sales taxes to which some States are having to resort in order to provide for these purposes.

I sincerely trust the House conferees will agree in conference to the Senate amendment and am certain the House will be inclined to favor such a report if opportunity is afforded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMPACTS BETWEEN STATES

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 146, to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] states that in no way will this bill be detrimental to labor or labor disputes, or in any manner authorize State compacts of that kind.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, this resolution is designed to protect the interests of labor. I have a letter from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green, the last paragraph of which reads as follows:

Secretary Watts states that the resolution deserves the support of labor. I concur in this position. I am glad to advise you in this way.

This letter is signed by William Green, president American Federation of Labor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think there is an ambiguity in section 3 which should be cleared up. I am asking these questions merely to accomplish the legislative intent of the author of the bill. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the last sentence requires that these pacts be sent to Congress for the approbation of Congress before they become effective?

Mr. HEALEY. That is absolutely so. There is not a safeguard that already exists that is not included in this particular bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. After the States have entered into the compacts and their legislatures have ratified them they must then be ratified by Congress?

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. HEALEY. The objects of the bill are manifold. Section 2 provides that upon the request of the States negotiating under this act the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations. This is new and confers a right upon the States to request that a representative of the Government be present during the negotiation of the pact. The bill also is designed to encourage and support the policy of States entering into agreements and compacts with each other and in groups for the purpose of agreeing upon and securing uniform legislation affecting the relation of employer and employees.

Events of the past 3 or 4 years have demonstrated that there is a necessity for a more effective method of conserving the economic and social interests of the citizens of the several States. The migration of factories from State to State has become all too common. The causes of this migration can be found principally in the effort to discover locations where the most lenient industrial legislation exists. States which have enacted regulatory legislation for the betterment of working conditions in its industries find themselves sorely handicapped in competition with those States which have less stringent industrial legislation. This condition has become accentuated during the depression. This situation has resulted in a general lowering of standards. Advances which have taken years to accomplish are in danger of being swept away.

This legislation will afford the States an opportunity to reach a solution of problems confronting them by their own efforts and by mutual cooperation. The members of the Judiciary Committee, which unanimously reported this resolution, believe such efforts should be encouraged in every way by the Federal Government. Favorable action by Congress on this resolution is a significant step in the direction of indicating our desire for higher standards of industrial legislation.

The compacts may provide for considerable flexibility of legislative and administrative detail which will leave the individual States free to draft their legislative and administrative decrees in common without restrictive details in the compacts themselves. Provision may be made for continuing modification in the light of experience in that operation.

Compacts between States have hitherto been concerned with the natural or physical resources of the various States that have entered into them, while compacts envisaged under this resolution will be concerned with social interests. There is, in fact, a precedent which may be cited in relation to this resolution, chapter 186, acts of 1911—Sixty-first Congress, United States Statutes at Large, volume 36, part 1, page 961—provides in part as follows:

The consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to each of the several States of the Union to enter into any agreement of compact not in conflict with any law of the United States, with any other State or States, for the purpose of conserving the forests and the water supply of the States entering into such an agreement or compact.

Not only is this an example of advance consent as provided by this resolution, but it is an indication of the interest of the Congress in conservation. Thus, it may be seen that the conservation of natural resources was recognized as a matter of national concern more than 20 years ago. Surely then it must be no less evident today that the conservation of the economic and social interests and resources of the several States should be a matter of not less importance and national concern.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I thank the gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize the several States to negotiate compacts or agreements to promote greater uniformity in the laws of such States affecting labor and industries

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the several States to negotiate and enter into compacts or agreements among them or any of them providing for greater uniformity in the laws of the several States affecting the relation of employers and employees.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That upon the request of the Governor of any State negotiating a compact or agreement with any other State or States the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask any questions of the gentleman from Massachusetts while he was attempting to secure unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill because I did not want any objections I may have had to the bill to start any discussion that might ultimately result in killing the bill.

I think it has a very good purpose, namely, that the Federal Government shall assist the various States in an effort to negotiate these agreements. I do not believe, however, that we should go as far as this bill goes. It is dangerous, because, as I see it, if two States were to enter into a pact or agreement and that pact or agreement were confirmed or approved by the Congress, there is no way in which the various States could get out from under the provisions of the agreement excepting and unless they again entered into another agreement canceling the first. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated to me privately when I was discussing the matter with him that undoubtedly these agreements or pacts would contain some provision which would enable the States to get out from under the provisions of such agreement once it became operative; however, I believe it is dangerous to enter upon a policy that makes it possible for two or more States to enter into an agreement that would be so binding there would be no possibility of those States repealing the same and no possibility of their changing their minds later on unless they got the consent of the other States with which they negotiated the treaty. Therefore, I offered the amendment which would have the effect of merely authorizing the President to designate some Federal Government official to collaborate with the States and assist them in entering into negotiations.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman answer this question: If one State did not want to abide by the agreement how could the agreement be enforced?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the law.

Mr. LLOYD. But how could it be enforced?

Mr. BOILEAU. It would be enforced the same as any other law, as I understand it, and I confess I have not given this matter the thought and study that would justify me in making an objection that would kill the bill. That is what prompted me to refrain from interposing an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Perhaps I can help the gentleman. When the proposed legislation was first suggested, it contained a provision that the conferees should be the States and a representative of the Federal Government. I was responsible for raising the point that the Federal Government had no business in these conferences among the States which dealt with matters peculiarly to the interests of the States themselves unless invited. As a compromise it was arranged that if the States themselves desired the assistance of the Federal Government they would notify the Federal Government to send a representative to the conference. We were anxious to get away from the notion that the Federal Government was dominating the conferences of States dealing with matters peculiar to the States' own interests.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is a fine position for the gentleman to take, and I believe my amendment accomplishes just that, because it provides that upon the request of the Governor of one of the States the President of the United States shall designate some official to assist in negotiations with the States. I do not believe that any agreement the States might enter into would be binding until Congress approved of the agreement. That is as I see it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make this statement to the gentleman? The gentleman is familiar with the fact that the only limitation imposed upon the right of the States to enter into an agreement is contained in the Federal Constitution. The Federal Constitution provides that agreements are not effective or binding unless they are approved by Congress. In this connection, may I say this—and I do so because it is of more than ordinary and passing interest. There is not so much reason for that provision in the Constitution now. As a matter of fact, it was incorporated in the Constitution in the beginning in order to prevent groups of States from getting together and breaking up the Union. We are now a Nation.

May I say just one more word, which will not take more than a minute, and then I will be through?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think if the States did enter into a pact, that the Federal Government could coerce any State in the Union to live up to that pact? I think that is the subject which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] was just discussing. Could you coerce or force through the Federal Government the States to live up to any kind of a pact?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. I do not think so, with reference to the character of agreement which seems to be contemplated under this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not think you could, either.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I ask the gentleman from Texas if there is any necessity for Congress to give the States authority to enable them to negotiate or to get together and talk over these pacts?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I doubt whether you could coerce any State to do anything. I think this is in the nature of a treaty between sovereign States, but they may not make it unless they have the authority of Congress. That is all there is to it.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I want to say to my colleagues. Due to the enormous concentration of power in the Federal Government and the fact we do not have the opportunity for decentralization that for instance England has, where it has physical separation among its territories, we are going to have to develop in America the policy of States that have things that are of common interest getting together and dealing with such interest without having to come to the American Congress in order to have it done for them. We will have to feel our way in that direction. This bill will help to give us a chance to see how it works.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman perfectly. I simply want to bring out this point, if I may, and I believe the gentleman from Texas will agree with me. In order for the States to get together to negotiate a treaty it is not necessary that they have permission from Congress. They can get together and talk about a treaty and come to an agreement, but such a treaty is not binding until it is approved by Congress.

Mr. KELLER. Why?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is my understanding, under the Constitution. So we do not need this legislation in order to give them the right to talk these things over, and if we do not pass the legislation they can get together and negotiate and then submit their agreement to Congress and if Congress approves it, it becomes binding. As I understand it, the only real change in the law that would be accomplished by the enactment of this measure is to give the President of the United States the right to designate a Federal representative to deal with the States and assist them. Is not that correct?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In order that we may save time, since other gentlemen are in a hurry to get on with the consideration of this calendar, I will say to my friend, without going into any detail, this is the usual procedure followed since the organization of the Government. I have not time to go into it further.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am going to take enough time to discuss my amendment. I did not object to the consideration of the bill because I did not want to be put in the position of stopping the legislation without giving it adequate consideration, but it seems to me that if the only thing to be accomplished is to give the President of the United States the right to designate an official to confer with the States we ought to give him that power and stop, because I think there is a lot of danger in giving this authority and permitting the States to go ahead and negotiate treaties with the approval of Congress that might possibly be irrevocable, so that even the action of one of the States could not change the effect of the treaty once they got into it. If the only purpose to be accomplished by the bill is to give the President the right to designate someone to assist the States and act with them, we ought to pass the bill with that language in, and that language only. I therefore have offered this amendment, which would have that desired effect.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU), there were—ayes 29, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Upon the request of the States negotiating under this act the President may designate a representative to attend upon such negotiations.

SEC. 3. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon any State a party thereto unless and until it has been approved by the legislatures of each of the States whose assent is contemplated by the terms of the compact or agreement and by the Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GROVER CLEVELAND

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 33, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland, in Washington, D. C.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

LXXIX—303

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 147

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from the date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose, to erect a statue of Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, 1885 to 1889 and 1893 to 1897, in the city of Washington at such place as may be designated by the Fine Arts Commission, subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, the model of the statue so to be erected and the pedestal thereof to be first approved by the said Commission and by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be presented by such association to the people of the United States.

That for the preparation of the site and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue, under the direction of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5456, relating to the powers and duties of United States marshals.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LEECH LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2045, to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there a member of the committee present who can explain the purposes of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman have a copy of the report?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and I have read it very carefully. The report does not say a thing or give any report, I think, probably, contrary to the rules, and that is why I am asking for information.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, the Committee on Indian Affairs acted on this bill pending a report from the Secretary of the Interior, because, as the gentleman will note from the report, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and said there was no objection to the bill. Since the committee acted, we have received a report from the Secretary, and he has approved the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture has also approved the bill as well as the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BACON. Who owns the lands now, may I ask?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Government owns the lands now.

Mr. BACON. They are public lands?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes. The Indians formerly owned the lands, and the Indians were paid $2,000 for the lands. If the Indians are given the lands back, the bill provides that the Government shall be reimbursed $2,000 out of tribal funds. This will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. BACON. How much land is involved?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It is just a small acreage, large enough for a townsite—200 acres.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the gentleman's explanation, I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H. R. 2045

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby withdrawn from the Minnesota National Forest Reserve under the Department of Agriculture and are hereby permanently reserved as Indian lands for the use of the Leech Lake Band of Chippewas in the State of Minnesota, without in any manner affecting existing reserves for church, cemetery, or other purposes, or individual rights and interests in said lands:

South half southwest quarter northeast quarter and lots 9 to 30, inclusive, section 17, township 142 north, range 30 west, fifth principal meridian, Minnesota, containing 168.44 acres.

Said Indians may take fish from the navigable waters adjacent to the above-described lands for their own use and not for sale without being amenable to the State game and fish laws of the State of Minnesota.

SEC. 2. Said lands are hereby permanently reserved for the use of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for village site purposes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Chippewa tribal fund now held in trust in the Treasury of the United States a sufficient sum to reimburse the United States for any moneys paid said Chippewa Indians for these lands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO ASSIST LATIN AMERICAN REPUBLICS IN MILITARY AND NAVAL MATTERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 3482, to amend the act of May 19, 1926, an act to authorize the President to detail officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to assist the Governments of the Latin American Republics in military and naval matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I will.

Mr. EDMISTON. I think the gentleman misunderstands this. We had this up before by unanimous consent. This has nothing to do with Latin American countries.

Mr. YOUNG. I might say that that is the reason for my objection. If this had anything to do with Latin American countries I would not object, because the Latin American countries are in our own backyard. More than a hundred years ago, in announcing the Monroe Doctrine, we were protecting things in our own backyard. This has relation to the Philippine Islands, many thousand miles away.

Mr. EDMISTON. Does the gentleman believe that during this 10 years of the formative period we should not assist them, show them the courtesy of loaning our officers of the Marine Corps to direct them in preparation for national defense?

Mr. YOUNG. I am not convinced, and I object.

PAWNEE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4376, for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point that I be permitted to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, showing that this claim was settled by the United States Government through an act of Congress, in which Congress paid this Indian tribe for the very land that this bill now provides that this tribe should be reimbursed for. That was by act of Congress, March 3, 1875.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object to the gentleman's request, and I shall not object, I should like to say that there are other bills on this calendar that are just as vicious as this bill, which would take $57,000 interest out of the Treasury on these claims that have already been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Committee on Expenditures recently held hearings, which showed that Congress has passed legislation sending cases to the Court of Claims, setting aside the statute of limitations, and the claims amount to three and one-quarter billion dollars.

The hearings before the Committee on Expenditures disclose that the Congress since 1924 passed 110 bills which empowered the Court of Claims to hear cases growing out of claims filed by Indian tribes in which they held they were entitled to money as a result of treaties, acts of Congress, and Executive orders. Some of the claims go back to 1779. There were no limitations. The bills appeared harmless, no amount being named therein, and in every instance they passed under unanimous consent, always being placed on the Consent Calendar. There are two dozen such bills pending now before House and Senate committees, one having been reported and is on the Consent Calendar. Some of the bills give the Government the right to offset the claims by showing money advanced and gratuities the Indians had received, but in many of the laws there is no provision for offsets.

It cost the General Accounting Office $157,000 and took 7 years for that office to secure evidence for the Department of Justice to oppose one claim amounting to over $250,000,000. That case has not been tried. No matter the result, the General Accounting Office spends thousands of dollars in securing evidence to present to the court. The bills further provide the General Accounting Office must turn over its records to the attorneys for the claimants. Congress in the future, I am sure, is going to go slow before passing any additional bills of this kind.

The Indian Bureau does not know what is going on. All bills such as this one and future bills granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear cases should be referred to the Attorney General and the Comptroller General and not to the Indian Bureau or Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 25, 1935.

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN,

Member of Congress, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of March 11, 1935, forwarding a copy of H. R. 4376, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "A bill for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma", and requesting to be advised whether this office has ascertained from the accounting records the gratuity payments made by the United States to this tribe.

No statement from the accounting records showing gratuity or other payments to the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma has been prepared, for the reason that no suit has been authorized and no claim filed heretofore on behalf of these Indians which would necessitate its preparation, and no report has been requested by the committee for use in its consideration of this bill or identical bills introduced in prior Congresses.

The bill H. R. 4376 provides as follows:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,479.50, together with interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum from the 5th day of February 1878, due the Pawnee Tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, on account of a deficiency of 4,800 acres in the area of the reservation under the treaty of September 24, 1857 (11 Stat. L. 279 [729 correct]), at $4.25 an acre; and to cover compensation for railroad rights-of-way for which no payment was ever made to the tribe."

With reference to that part preceding the semicolon, line 10, you are advised as follows:

Under the terms of article 1 of the treaty of September 24, 1857 (11 Stat. 729), the confederated bands of Pawnee Indians ceded and relinquished to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to all the lands owned or claimed by them, with the exception of a tract of land, contained within said cession, which was set apart as a reservation for the Pawnee Indians and described as "30 miles long from east to west by 15 miles from north to south, including both banks of the Loup Fork of the Platte River, the east line of which shall be at a point not farther east than the mouth of Beaver Creek." The survey of said tract of land was completed in 1873. In 1874 a resurvey was made of the eastern boundary line of said reservation, and it was ascertained by the resurvey that the east and west lines were but 29½ miles apart instead of 30 miles, thus leaving a deficiency in the proper area of the reservation of 4,800 acres. (See Annual reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1873 and 1874, pp. 16 and 36, respectively.)

In the following year, 1875, an appropriation was made to indemnify the Pawnee Tribe of Indians for the aforesaid deficiency of 4,800 acres of land. See the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. 448), the pertinent provision of which is as follows:

"For this amount, to indemnify the Pawnee Indians for 4,800 acres of land erroneously excluded from their reservation in Nebraska by the survey of the boundary line thereof, $6,000."

The amount, $6,000, was set up on the books of the United States Treasury under the heading "Payment to Pawnees for lands excluded from reservation", and an examination of the records of this office discloses that the entire sum of $6,000 was disbursed for the benefit of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians in the fiscal year 1876.

It thus appears that the Pawnee Indians were compensated for the entire 4,800 acres of land erroneously excluded from their reservation in the amount of $6,000, or $1.25 per acre, which must have been regarded by the Congress as a proper settlement at the time provision therefor was made. In this connection, see act of June 10, 1872 (17 Stat. 391), which fixed $1.25 per acre as the minimum price at which lands within this reservation were authorized to be sold. This law was still in effect at the time the above-mentioned settlement was made.

It would appear from the report on this bill, House Report No. 286, of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the committee was not aware of the settlement heretofore made, and the committee may now wish to give the matter further consideration.

If notwithstanding the fact that in 1875 these Indians were allowed what was then considered a fair price for the 4,800 acres of land, the sponsors of the bill feel that the tribe should have been paid for the 4,800 acres of land at the rate of $4.25 per acre instead of $1.25 per acre, it is suggested the bill be amended to provide for an additional payment of $3 per acre instead of $4.25, making a total of $14,400 instead of $20,400, and to provide for the deduction from the payment of any amounts disclosed by the accounting records to have been paid to the tribe as gratuities.

As to the other item included in the bill, being $79.50, "to cover compensation for railroad rights-of-way for which no payment was ever made to the tribe", neither the bill nor the committee's report thereon discloses any details as to the particular period, authorization, location, or area of the land involved therein, or any reasons why the allowance should be made at this time.

I trust the foregoing will be helpful in your consideration of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak on this bill. The statement has been made that this is "with other vicious bills." I think I am entitled to make this statement in the RECORD. The council for the tribe proposed this legislation 2 or 3 years ago and the bill was introduced and went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Indian Affairs Committee requested a report from the Indian Bureau. The Bureau reported favorably on the bill, to the effect that a survey had omitted 4,800 acres for which the Indians had never been paid. It was agreed by the Bureau that $4.50 an acre for this land was a proper amount that should be paid the Indians for the property.

Mr. COCHRAN. The letter I have comes from the Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. I am going to say that, if the gentleman will give me time. The Indian Bureau never mentioned the idea of the claim having been paid, nor did I ever hear of such a thing until less than an hour ago, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and I think very properly so, called my attention to the fact that he had a very recent report—I do not know the date, but evidently within the last few days—from the Comptroller General to the effect that years ago the claim had been paid and the money used by the Government for the benefit of the Indians. I am very glad that he put the statement from the Comptroller General in the RECORD, because if these are the facts nobody has a right to make any such claim. I think it is fair that he does put it in the RECORD. I want to know what the facts are. The Indian Bureau, since I have been in Congress the last 4 years, never made this suggestion, that this claim has ever been paid, and I never heard of such a thing until today. So the bill is not necessarily a "vicious bill", in the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUX], because the Indian Bureau did not know that the claim had been paid, if it has been paid, and, further, this is the first time it has been on the calendar this year, and it now develops that it may have been paid.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Is this academic discussion of this bill in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is speaking under unanimous consent.

Mr. DISNEY. And not necessarily in an academic way. I thought I was giving the House some facts.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the bill has been objected to.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the voluntary interruption of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma was allowed 2 minutes.

Mr. DISNEY. I did not understand that I was restricted to 2 minutes. I wanted a moment or two to discuss it, and I have not intruded upon the House, and I surely do not enjoy being intruded on to no effect. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

[H. Rept. No. 286, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

PAWNEE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4376) for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

The views of the Department are expressed in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to an identical bill (H. R. 9606) of the Seventy-third Congress. The letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 14, 1934.

HON. EDGAR HOWARD,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your request for report on H. R. 9606, a bill for the relief of the Pawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma.

This bill is for the same purpose as H. R. 4503 and H. R. 6007, upon which a report was submitted to your committee under date of April 28, 1934.

The bills last above mentioned authorized an appropriation of $6,079.50, for loss by the Indians of 4,800 acres of land representing a shortage in the reservation, and payment for rights-of-way of $79.50. The value of the shortage in acreage of the reservation lands was computed at $1.25 an acre.

The reservation was granted these Indians by the treaty of September 2, 1857 (11 Stat. L. 1179). The treaty provided that the reservation should be 30 miles long and 15 miles wide, but after the survey had been completed it was found that the reservation was 29½ miles long, resulting in the shortage in the acreage above-mentioned. This shortage was mentioned in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1874, page 36.

A proposal has heretofore been made to pay these Indians $1.25 an acre for their land, on the theory that that was the usual price for land of this nature. However, it has recently been brought to our attention that authority was not given to sell the land of the Indians until 1876, when Congress enacted legislation for that purpose. (See the act of Apr. 10, 1876; 19 Stat. L. 28.) The act provides that the lands should be appraised and sold, but the minimum price should not be less than $2.50 an acre. The lands were opened to sale by the General Land Office circular of February 5, 1878, and the different tracts of land on the reservation brought from $2.50 to $6 an acre.

The bill now here authorizes the payment to these Indians of $20,479.50, with interest at 5 percent from February 5, 1878, at $4.25 an acre, which is the average price for other Pawnee Reservation lands sold under the above act. It is believed that this is only fair to the Indians, and would be no more than sufficient compensation for the shortage in their reservation.

Favorable reports have been made heretofore on H. R. 4503 and H. R. 6007, which carried authority for an appropriation of only $6,079.40.

While I favor legislation carrying the compensation provided by the instant bill, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, under date of June 6, advised that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

It will be noted that the Secretary of the Interior states that he favors legislation, carrying the compensation provided by the identical bill (H. R. 9606) of the Seventy-third Congress, but that on June 6, 1934, the Bureau of the Budget advised that the proposed legislation would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

During the consideration of H. R. 4376 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee and stated that the Department has no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, on behalf of the committee that considered the bill, that the letter sent by the Secretary of the Interior reviewed all of the facts in the case and acknowledges it to be a just debt. It did not say it had been paid.

Mr. COCHRAN. The letter I put in the RECORD is from the Comptroller General, dated March 25, 1935.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING, JONESBORO, ARK.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6290) to authorize acquisition of land to provide appropriate means of access to the post-office building at Jonesboro, Ark.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, as an addition to the post-office site at Jonesboro, Ark., such portion of the 15-foot public alley north of the site as may be necessary to provide appropriate means of access to the loading platform of the building as extended and remodeled under authority of the act of Congress (46 Stat. 1595), approved March 4, 1931.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SAN FRANCISCO EXPOSITION, 1938

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 151, authorizing and requesting the President to invite the countries of the world to participate in the San Francisco Exposition of 1938 at San Francisco, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEMURRAGE ON COLLECT-ON-DELIVERY PARCELS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5540) excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the author of the bill present?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. The purpose of this bill seems to be to reduce charges by the Post Office Department on certain classes of mail. Am I correct?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I am wondering if the gentleman would be willing to suggest to the Post Office Department that they also reduce the rates on first-class mail from 3 cents to 2 cents an ounce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 23, 1930 (46 Stat. 377; 39 U. S. C., Supp. VII, sec. 246c), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, any collect-on-delivery parcel which the addressee fails to remove from the post office within 20 days from the first attempt to deliver or the first notice of arrival at the office of address may be returned to the sender, charged with the return postage, whether or not such parcel bears any specified time limit for delivery; and a demurrage charge of not exceeding 5 cents per day may be collected when delivery has not been made to either the addressee or the sender until after the expiration of the prescribed period: Provided, That no demurrage shall be charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between post offices in continental United States and post offices in the Territories and island possessions of the United States."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill extending the period during which no demurrage is charged on collect-on-delivery parcels and excepting the imposition of demurrage charged on collect-on-delivery parcels exchanged between the continental and island possessions."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN PERSONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3023) to provide for citizenship to persons born in the United States, who have not acquired any other nationality by personal affirmative act, but who have heretofore lost their United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent under the laws of a foreign country, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, we should have further time to consider the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATION FOR POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3612) to provide for adjusting the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I wish the author would explain the bill. This means increasing compensation of post-office inspectors, does it not?

Mr. DOBBINS. Yes. The purpose of this bill is to place the field forces of the Post Office Department under the same classification arrangements as to salaries, grades, and promotions as apply to all of the field forces of the other executive departments.

Mr. TABER. What classification are they now?

Mr. DOBBINS. They are required to be automatically promoted during the first 5 years. It results in the promotion of some who would not be selected for promotion otherwise and occasionally retards the deserved promotion of others who have performed rather distinguished service under trying or dangerous conditions. I would say to the gentleman that at the present time the salaries and grades for Post Office inspectors run from $2,800 to $4,500. They are automatically promoted during the first 5 years, so that there are only 70 who are now drawing a salary less than $3,800. Of the 540 inspectors, the remaining 470 of them are in the grades from $3,800 to $4,500. This bill does not propose to disturb their present pay at all but to regulate promotions in the future as they are in the Revenue Service, in the Customs Service, and in the other field services of the departments. The Post Office Department is the only one excepted from that otherwise uniform procedure.

Mr. TABER. What will the salary of these people be under this bill?

Mr. DOBBINS. This does not propose to change the salaries or grades. They run from $2,800 up to the highest grade of $4,500.

Mr. TABER. It will not go higher than it did before?

Mr. DOBBINS. This does not propose to change the salary grades at all, but simply to apply to them the same provisions of the general law that apply to other field forces.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I wonder if the employees affected have approved of this bill?

Mr. DOBBINS. We held hearings on it before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and there were no objections raised. The chief inspector approved it, and I believe there was another representative of the Department present, but I cannot remember who it was. I think it is generally approved by the forces in the Department, however. It is a very fair measure and is expected to promote even greater efficiency than prevails under the present system.

Mr. TRUAX. I questioned the fact because the postal employees are usually quite active in their own organization and we usually hear from them when there is legislation affecting them, but if the gentleman assures me it is acceptable to the employees affected, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to adjust the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge in the post-office inspection service to correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia. Any appropriation now or hereafter available for the payment of the compensation of post-office inspectors and inspectors in charge shall be available for payment of compensation in accordance with the rates adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 619, to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, is amended by striking out the final period and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That this section shall not apply to merchandise loaded on railroad cars and transported in any railroad-car ferry operated between fixed termini on the Great Lakes as part of a rail route or to railroad freight traffic transported in any vessel as part of a rail and water route pursuant to rail and water rate tariffs, if such car ferry or vessel is owned by a common carrier by water and operated as part of a rail route with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if the stock of such common carrier by water, or its predecessor, was owned or controlled by a common carrier by rail prior to June 5, 1920, and if the stock of the common carrier owning such car ferry or vessel is, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now owned or controlled by any common carrier by rail and if such car ferries and vessels are documented under the laws of the United States."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "to", insert the words "the transportation of."

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "and" and insert "or to motor vehicles with or without trailers, and with their passengers or contents, when accompanied by the operator thereof, when such railroad cars or motor vehicles are."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "or to railroad freight traffic transported in any vessel."

Page 2, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "ferries and vessels are" and insert the words "ferry is built in and."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the purpose of the amendments as set forth in S. 619, which is an act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, engages my attention because of the operation of the car ferries from St. Ignace to Mackinaw and also crossing Lake Michigan. It was brought out before the committee by Capt. E. H. Doner, of St. Ignace, Mich., who holds the position of superintendent of the State-owned car ferries, and who testified before our committee that the State enters into contract for the winter months with the Mackinaw Transportation Co., owners and operators of an ice-crushing steamer that successfully keeps the lane open between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace. Upon inquiry from the distinguished chairman of the committee, Congressman Bland, Captain Doner explained that the ice crusher is one-third Canadian owned, which percentage of ownership is not according to the requirements as now set forth. But Captain Doner further testified that the State of Michigan owned ferries were not competent to break the ice across the straits and for that reason the business was turned over to the Mackinaw Transportation Co. during the winter months.

Were this act to amend section 27 of the Marine Act of 1920 not to pass it would necessitate the building of an ice-crushing steamer by the State of Michigan and the reconditioning of docks at Mackinaw City and St. Ignace, incurring a cost of about a million dollars and as this cost would come, strange as it may seem, from the road department having these ferries in charge, it would mean a curtailment in the highway program of the State to the extent of a million dollars. The paving program of the State therefore would suffer. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, the passing of the bill will prove a tremendous saving to the State of Michigan, and at the same time protect the rights of the traveling public wishing to cross the straits in motor vehicles both as to passengers in passenger cars and as to trucks and their contents. Even the hunter takes this route to the northern lands of Michigan and the returning course bears evidence of the trophies of the chase.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 107, authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 21 be substituted in lieu of House Joint Resolution 107.

The effect of the request which I make would be to cause the law, when enacted, to authorize and direct the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the United States Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 11 of each year, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The only change which the request will make will be to authorize and direct the President to do what is provided to be done by him each year on October 11 rather than to do it only once, on October 11, 1935.

Mr. Speaker, the commemoration of the death of General Pulaski is a worthy act, and his death should be commemorated annually. General Pulaski was a true patriot. Born in Poland, where his father and brothers had died for Polish liberty, he came to our shores and volunteered his services to Washington in the Revolutionary War in 1777. These services were of so high a character, especially in the Battle of Brandywine, that he was promoted by the Congress to a Cavalry command, with the rank of brigadier general. He afterward organized an independent corps of Cavalry and Light Infantry, operating effectively under General Lincoln in South Carolina. He was mortally wounded in action in the siege of Savannah, Ga., and died on October 11, 1779.

The Polish people in their own land have been an oppressed people. They have fought and struggled bitterly for their own freedom. They appreciate liberty. They respect constituted authority. The Polish people in the United States are good citizens—home-loving and law-abiding, with a pride in the country of their adoption. They should be encouraged in this pride.

Let us pass this resolution calling for annual commemoration of the death of the great Polish-American hero, General Pulaski, as an expression of our appreciation of the contribution of Poland and the Polish people to the history of our country.

I trust that the substitute will be unanimously consented to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I think it is fair to the House to have you understand the effect of that request. The House resolution limits the operation of this proposed law to this year. The House bill provides that the President of the United States shall issue a proclamation to the people of the United States with regard to the display of flags, and so forth, for this year. The Senate bill makes Pulaski Day a permanent thing.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman think we ought to do that for a man who dedicated his life to us on the altar of freedom?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I was not talking about the altar of freedom yet. I was trying to explain the bill. I think the House ought to understand just what the bill means. The Senate bill makes this an annual matter, calling upon the President of the United States to issue a proclamation each year.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What reasonable objection is there to substituting the Senate resolution and making it a permanent matter? What is the objection?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am explaining what the bill is. It may turn out there will not be any objection. After all, we are comparatively a young country. General Pulaski rendered a great service to this country. I used to go to a town in Texas named Pulaski. All over this country are towns of this name. There are monuments erected to him, and he is honored in other ways.

Mr. KENNEY. Of course, the Revolutionary War was the most important war this Nation has fought, the war that gave us our independence, and General Pulaski was one of the greatest of our leaders who gave us our liberty.

From the day of his birth in Podolia, in 1748, until his tragic death at Savannah, Ga., in 1779, Casimir Pulaski breathed the air of liberty and knew what it was to battle the dread monster, oppression.

By honoring him we shall pay just tribute to a great patriot and, by so doing, shall recognize Poland's contribution to our liberty and civilization. It will be an example to our children of Polish extraction and all true Americans. His unselfish devotion to the cause of freedom and this liberty-loving land of ours will be the object of emulation by the younger generation, if we but now confer a belated honor to his memory by establishing Pulaski's Day not for a day, but for the years to come.

Congress now has the opportunity of making "the amend honorable", and I have the greatest faith that this body shall not fail to grasp it. Long ago Congress, by legislation, voted to erect a monument to his sacred memory, but, strange to relate, its action was never carried into effect. Pulaski did not fail our country; we shall not, I am sure, fail him now. Therefore, we must, if we act rightly, substitute the Senate bill or else reject the committee amendment so as to commemorate for all time this great general and hero of the Revolutionary War.

Coming to America in 1777 he presented himself to Gen. George Washington and offered his valued services to the Continental Army. He immediately showed his dash and brilliancy at Brandywine. Congress was quick to see his worth and made him a brigadier general and chief of cavalry. He was given command of his own legion—Pulaski Legion it was called—named for him. Valiantly he fought for 2 years, distinguished for bravery and military success. He won many laurels as is so well known by every school boy and girl. He was one of the foremost heroes of the war. Our debt to him is huge. Finally he gave up his life for our heritage, having been wounded mortally at Savannah, on October 11, 1779. Our purpose shall be, indisputably, to pay him a mark of respect, not only on that day of this year, but we shall authorize the President to issue his proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government to display our flag on all Government buildings on October 11 of this and each year in the future and inviting our people to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies or exercises in commemoration of the death of this great Polish-American hero.

My State of New Jersey has already honored Casimir Pulaski. The great highway structure erected between Jersey City and Newark, forming part of a great transcontinental highway, has been dedicated to his memory and is nationally known as the "General Pulaski Skyway." Honor to General Pulaski is honor where honor is due. He established a precedent for the great population of Polish people who came to America, a precedent and example that has had a salutary effect and is responsible in great measure for their love of America and its institutions and for their devotion and loyalty to this great country, whose citizenship they readily embrace. Let us pay all due respect and honor to the great Pole and American hero today, and for all time. It cannot be gainsaid that General Pulaski is one of the great heroes to whom we owe our independence and our liberty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. This bill does not create a national holiday.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not.

Mr. COCHRAN. It simply provides recognition of this great patriot who came to our country and gave up his life that the country might be free. There are millions of people now citizens of this country who came here from Poland and who celebrate annually General Pulaski Day. I cannot, for the life of me, see any objection to making this an annual affair rather than an affair for just one year.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have no personal objection to it.

Mr. MEAD. I would suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Texas that we might as well settle this important question definitely right now. Otherwise the gentleman's committee will have a similar resolution to consider in the next session. I hope the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee will accept the Senate resolution which sets aside October 11 of each year to honor the memory of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, whose great service played such an important part in winning the War of the Revolution.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 107, which sets aside October 11, 1935, as a national holiday in commemoration of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, while somewhat applauding the courage and daring of this Polish patriot, actually, because it necessitates a separate resolution each year, setting aside this holiday, seems to play a sort of game with the pride of the Polish people, who have embraced American citizenship, but whose natural affection for the heroes of their nation can never die out.

This resolution but weakly pays tribute to General Pulaski, who by his noble sacrifice in the cause of the American Colonies, has endeared himself forever in the hearts of Americans.

The resolution which would proclaim October 11, 1935, as General Pulaski's Memorial Day attempts to give recognition to the achievements of General Pulaski, and through them recognition of the contributions given to America by the Polish people. Why belittle our laudation by requiring separate legislative action each year in order to proclaim this holiday? At least 17 States have, through legislative enactment, designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day. The legislatures of other States have this matter up for similar consideration.

If the sentiment of so many individual States is for setting aside October 11 as a permanent holiday in memory of General Pulaski, Congress should also adopt the resolution which is now pending in the Senate and which would always make October 11 a holiday in memory of the man whose death was caused by wounds incurred while he was fighting for the Thirteen American Colonies. Surely his greatness, his suffering, his martyrdom to this country deserves that we take no half-way measures but instead freely acknowledge our debt to the Polish people by proclaiming the anniversary of his death permanently a holiday. It is only proper and just that we adopt the resolution which is now pending in the Senate.

The contribution of the Polish people to the American civilization is an important one. The Poles who have come to our shores have enriched our country in countless ways. A holiday in honor of one of their heroes who gave his all for our country will bring them pride and gratification, but that pride and gratification will be embittered unless we do the right thing—pay them the recognition which is due them by adopting a resolution calling for a permanent holiday on October 11 such as they themselves want.

I personally cannot support this resolution which requires separate legislative action each year to proclaim the anniversary of the date of the death of General Pulaski a holiday. It is a privilege to vote for the substitute Senate Joint Resolution No. 21, which is now before us, and which at once would designate this day for all time a day of commemoration and recognition to the Poles of America.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 21

Joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of West Virginia, Illinois, Michigan, Tennessee, Indiana, Wisconsin, New York, Nebraska, Texas, Minnesota, Delaware, Maryland, Arkansas, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Ohio, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Kentucky, South Carolina, Connecticut, California, Nevada, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment have designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929; October 11, 1931; October 11, 1932; and October 11, 1934, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11 of each year, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools, churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Joint Resolution 107 was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact a very large number of the Members of the House are interested in the resolution which has just been passed, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the resolution just passed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I join in this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution should not be limited by any amendment. The committee's amendment would restrict the observance of the memorial day to this year. This, I believe, is unjustly restrictive of the glory which the illustrious Polish-American soldier won for our infant Nation on the battlefields of the American Revolution. There can be no valid reason for limiting the commemoration of the virtues of such an outstanding and heroic figure to any one year. Just as his memory is greater than all the ages, so the observance of his achievements should be equally enduring and perpetual.

There is but one way to make this commemoration coextensive with his character. General Pulaski Memorial Day must occur in each and every year so that American children will constantly have before them the inspiration of his life and the memory of his heroic death at the siege of Savannah. Let us now substitute for this resolution the one that has already passed the Senate of the United States—Senate Joint Resolution 21—wherein it is provided that the memorial day commemorative of General Pulaski's death shall be observed in each year while the Nation lasts. There should not be a dissenting voice in this House in the overwhelming passage of this resolution.

Shortly after the opening of this session of Congress I introduced a resolution which not only directed the President to proclaim October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day but also authorized the Postmaster General to issue a special series of postage stamps in honor of the beloved Polish patriot. It is in every sense appropriate that we should thus extend merited recognition to the valorous son of a land that in 1932, during our celebration of the George Washington Bicentennial, issued a postage stamp with the engraving of the first President of our country. So, in honoring the courage and fidelity of Pulaski, we are similarly paying tribute to the brave land that gave him birth and gladly yielded him to us in our effort to liberate America from British rule.

The name of Pulaski was holy and revered even before he volunteered his services to the great American Commander in Chief. Even yet the Russian trembles as he reads of the death struggle at Okope. Mention the name of Pulaski within the gray old walls of the fortress of Czenstokow and each moss-covered stone and silent gun chamber becomes vocal with heroic praise. Speaking for himself and of himself, he says:

I regarded every moment as lost which was not employed in repelling the enemies of my country. I have endeavored to mark my course by an invincible fortitude. Neither the blood of one of my brothers, which was shed by the enemy before my eyes, nor the cruel servitude of another, nor the sad fate of so many of my relations and compatriots has shaken my patriotism. I declare before God and before all the powers of Europe that my heart is an utter stranger to crime. My thoughts and actions have had no other end than the good of my country.

Casimir Pulaski truly exemplified that love of liberty that has in every age characterized the Polish people and in other days made Poland the last refuge of Western civilization against the unrelenting destruction of the Turks. With the loss of his home, his fortunes, his family, with liberty crushed under the feet of a cruel invader, Pulaski looked from his own land across the seas and observed in the young republic of the West a new field for vindicating with his sword the same undying principles for which he had wielded it in his own fair land. Learning of his desire to follow the cause of Washington, Benjamin Franklin, who was then in Paris favored him with a letter to Washington, in which he said:

Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country against the three invading powers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, will have the honor of delivering this into your hands. The court here have encouraged and promoted his voyage from an opinion that he may be highly useful in our service.

Arriving in Philadelphia in the summer of 1777, he soon found service with Washington, Greene, Sullivan, and Lafayette at the Battle of the Brandywine.

To General Pulaski we owe the formation of our American Cavalry and the success of the American forces upon many a hard-fought field was in greatest measure due to his ability and his admired leadership. He was universally recognized as the most expert horseman in the American Army, and not the least among his contributions to the efficiency of Washington's cavalry was the knowledge of equestrianism that he imparted to it.

Mortally wounded at the siege of Savannah on October 9, 1779, the brave Pole died 2 days later on the ship, the Wasp, and his body was consigned with military honors to a watery grave, and today he sleeps where the ebbing tide of the Savannah commingles with the waves of the vast Atlantic. The best beloved of Mars, he sleeps in the arms of Neptune.

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the noble soul for whom we today plead for remembrance and honor. In the passage of this resolution it is little that we do, compared with that chivalry which led him, in the spirit of the crusader, to give to our country the last full measure of his devotion. As long as America lives, American hearts will thrill to the name and the fame of Poland's immortal son. As long as the sun shines on the waters of the Savannah, the spirit of Poland embodied in the memory of Casimir Pulaski shall stand on guard at the portals of the Republic he so devotedly loved.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks concerning House Joint Resolution 107, a joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, which resolution I introduced and which was passed today, substituted by Senate Joint Resolution 21, I am happy to state that it is a distinct honor to this hero of our Revolutionary War that the resolution passed without a dissenting vote.

I am particularly pleased that we have authorized the President to proclaim October 11 of each year a memorial day, because it is a fitting tribute to one who gave up his life in the service of our country, as General Pulaski did.

The many citizens of our country who came to our shores from Poland, or whose ancestors came from that country, may well feel pride in knowing that their gallant countryman has been so signally honored by this Nation.

General Pulaski was not an adventurer; he was a true lover of freedom. He took part in early youth in the struggles for the liberation of Poland against the tyrannical governments who suppressed its liberties. Upon the failure of the efforts to free his native land from the yoke of a foreign country, General Pulaski left his native country and traveled on the Continent. At Paris he made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, who narrated to him the struggles of our own Colonies for freedom. General Pulaski came to this country to assist in that struggle and to make it his homeland, just as many others have come to our shores ready and willing to make the sacrifices necessary while establishing themselves permanently in our land.

He reached America some time in 1777, and without waiting to be commissioned an officer in our Army, he joined the ranks as a private soldier. His bravery and ability were soon recognized. In Europe he had been reputed one of the greatest cavalry officers of his time, and it was not long after his entry into our forces that he showed he was entitled to this reputation. Students of history know his brilliant military record. Washington relied upon him in cavalry problems and soon recommended him to Congress for appointment as brigadier general in the following words:

This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country and has sacrificed his fortune and his zeal for these objects. He derives from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit.

It was shortly after his arrival that he was given this honor. He took charge of our cavalry, shared in its financial expenses, and raised its standard. It became one of the efficient arms of our military. The Pulaski Legion, named in his honor, was led by him with distinction in the southern sector. Heretofore our cavalry had been neglected, but under his leadership its value was apparent. It materially aided our troops through the remainder of the war.

On October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, General Pulaski was leading a charge of his cavalry. He was mortally wounded and was taken aboard ship for transport to Charleston but died in transport. His burial was at sea near the shores of the country for which he made the supreme sacrifice.

A stranger and alien—his example is a chapter in the story of this Nation's struggle for independence and a lesson to mankind of sacrifice for an ideal. It is, therefore, only a just tribute to his name and memory that Congress should now declare October 11 as Pulaski's Memorial Day.

And when the flag of our country is flown on October 11, in honor of the deeds of such a man, may we not recognize in this country that its heroes came from all races and countries, that we live here in a spirit of friendship and brotherhood, all serving the common good and each doing his part for the public weal.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have actively supported and am happy to have the privilege of voting for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the President to proclaim October 11 of each year Gen. Casimir Pulaski's Memorial Day.

It was on October 11, 1779, that the great Polish hero and patriot passed away from wounds received 2 days previously, on October 9, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.

General Pulaski, after having fought for Polish liberty in his native land, came to our country and tendered his services to George Washington in our contest for American liberty in the Revolutionary War, and rendered distinguished services in the Battle of Brandywine and in numerous engagements in South Carolina.

The Polish people have made a valuable contribution to the development and progress of the United States, and many of them are among the most-respected citizens we have in my district in the State of Washington. They are industrious, thrifty, and law-abiding, and a credit to the nation of their birth.

LEIF ERICSON DAY

Mr. Speaker, I urge that we also take up at an early day for consideration and passage House Joint Resolution 26, to fittingly observe and commemorate October 9 as Leif Ericson Day, in honor of the discovery of America in the year 1000 by that intrepid Norseman.

In the words of Prof. R. B. Anderson, of Madison, Wis., of the Leif Ericson Memorial Association, briefly the story of Leif Ericson's explorations follow:

Then it happened that the oldest of Erik the Red's three sons, Leif by name, made a voyage to Norway in the year 999. There he became acquainted with Norway's famous King, Olaf Tryggvason. Olaf Tryggvason was himself a Christian, and had begun converting the people of Norway to Christianity. He had also persuaded the Parliament of Iceland to adopt Christianity as the religion of all Iceland. He persuaded Leif Ericson to accept the creed of the Galilean, and, when Leif was baptized, King Olaf was his godfather. Then King Olaf requested Leif to go as a missionary to Greenland to convert his father's colonists to Christianity. Leif accepted this mission; but he decided that he, on his way to Greenland, would look up and explore those lands which had been seen by his kinsman, Bjarne Herjulfson, in 986.

With his party of 36 men he reached first the land that Bjarne had seen last, that is Newfoundland. He went ashore, made some explorations, found that the country was covered with rocks, and named it Helluland. He then proceeded to the southwest and found the second land seen by Bjarne, found that it was heavily wooded, and named it Markland. Then he continued on his voyage and on discovering the first land seen by Bjarne he sailed in a bay, out of this bay into a river, out of this river into a lake, out of this lake into another river which he ascended as far as it was deep enough to float his ship. Then he and his men went ashore, built a large house and decided to spend the winter there. This description fits admirably Boston Bay, the Charles River between Boston and Cambridge, the Boston Back Bay, also between Boston and Cambridge, and the Charles River emptying into the Back Bay. It seems that then Leif Ericson and his party must have built their house at what is now called Gerry's Landing, not far from where Harvard University is now located. On account of the abundance of grapes found in this new land Leif decided to call the country Vinland.

After spending the winter in Vinland, Leif loaded his ship with Vinland products and arrived in Greenland in the spring of 1001, when the Parliament was in session, and prevailed upon it to pass a resolution declaring the country Christian. We know positively that he reached this continent in the year 1000 because it was the same year in which he was baptized in Norway, and the same year in which Christianity was adopted by the Iceland Parliament. There is much more to this interesting subject. There were several other expeditions from Greenland to Vinland. One by Leif's brother Thorvald, in 1002 (Thorvald was killed by an arrow from one of the natives in Vinland and was buried there); one by Leif's brother Thorstein in 1005 (he did not reach Vinland but died on the way); one by Thorfinn Karlsefne, in 1007, and his wife Gudrid, the widow of Thorstein. Thorfinn and Gudrid went with 3 ships and 161 men for the purpose of organizing a colony in Vinland. They remained there 3 years, but found the aborigines too numerous to maintain themselves against them and so abandoned the colony and returned to Greenland. In the year 1008 Gudrid gave birth to a son. They named him Snorre, and he was the first white child to see the light of day in the New World.

Voyages to Vinland, especially for the purpose of bringing timber to Greenland and Iceland, continued down to the middle of the fourteenth century. The sagas give a report of a ship that came from Markland to Iceland in the year 1347. This was just before the breaking out of the black plague, which crippled all Europe for a century. It reduced the population of Norway, for instance, from 2,000,000 to 300,000. About this time the Greenland colony disappeared probably as a result of the black plague.

Mr. Speaker, the Norwegian people who have come to our shores have proved their worth as thrifty, intelligent, law-abiding citizens, and have been a real factor in the building of the Pacific Northwest, and we should grant to their great forbear, Leif Ericson the discoverer of the North American Continent, this recognition and honor.

EMBASSY IN FINLAND

Mr. Speaker, for similar reasons I favor the enactment of H. R. 4448, to provide funds for the acquisition of a site, erection of buildings, and the furnishing thereof for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States at Helsingfors, Finland.

Finland, the new Republic of the north, has in the past contributed richly to the culture, progress, and civilization of mankind; and many of her sons and daughters have been eminent in art, science, and literature. However, today she lifts aloft for the whole world the standard of "honesty, integrity, and good faith among nations", and is the only nation which has honorably discharged its obligations to the United States. I therefore favor the appropriation to provide adequate and dignified housing for our representation at Helsingfors so as to reflect credit upon the United States in Finland and serve to maintain the cordial relations which so happily exist between the American and Finnish people.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, Gen. Casimir Pulaski, although he spent scarcely more than a year on American soil, merits by his energetic and patriotic leadership the admiration and honor of the American people. The victory of the colonists, the founders of this great Nation, was partially due to his physical prowess, mental alertness, and fearless activity.

Reared under the shadow of a threatening war which became a reality in his youth, he became a guard of Duke Charles, and at the age of 25 his fiery ambition, his trained abilities, and his constant effort in behalf of the salvation of his fatherland made him the recognized leader of Poland. So great were the odds against him that his efforts and those of his countrymen were fruitless, and he was banished from his beloved land.

While traveling in Paris he met Benjamin Franklin, and through this acquaintance came to America, where, in 1777, he, a soldier famed throughout Europe, became a volunteer in the ranks of the pioneer army of George Washington. Here it was that his knowledge gained by practical experience in warfare made him a valuable man. Just as he had been a tireless worker in the Polish Army, so now he transferred his energy to the American cause. It was greatly through his effort that the rear attack by the British on the Colonial Army at Brandywine was not a success, and in recognition of his ability and his service after 2 months with the Army he was raised to the rank of brigadier commander of the cavalry. Perhaps his greatest work was the organizing of the Polish Legion, an independent corps under his command, which greatly aided in the success of the Revolution. General Pulaski had fought with daring fearlessness in the ranks of the Polish Army, and now, in like manner, amid the chaotic forces of the French and Americans facing the Redcoats at Savannah, Ga., he bounded forward, an inspiring figure, attempting to rally the American forces. It was in this attempt that he received a fatal wound. General Pulaski, renowned defender and leader of Poland; General Pulaski, stanch, patriotic, Colonial soldier of the New World; General Pulaski, an American hero, is truly deserving of the admiration and honor of the American people.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, on April 1, 1935, the House of Representatives adopted Senate Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

I am glad to join with my colleagues of the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States in making possible delayed tribute of respect and honor to a great soldier and a great Polish-American.

There is no more splendid element among the various nationality groups that make up the great melting pot we call the United States of America than the citizens of Polish extraction. The Polish immigrants and their early descendants were not only "the hewers of wood and the drawers of water", but rapidly took and are still taking their just and entitled places in the administrative, legislative, and industrial affairs of the Nation. The reputation of our Polish-American citizens as an industrious, law-abiding, and patriotic people cannot be assailed. In the religious, political, professional, and business fields Polish-American men and women are making worthwhile contributions to the welfare of our land.

Oppressed by alien oppressors in the homeland, they have given to the world a splendid example of family life, with its cultural and social background, together with their passionate devotion to the principles of religious and political liberty.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski was born in Poland of patriotic, liberty-loving parents. Many of his ancestors, his father, and his brother fought and died for Polish liberty. At an early age, after conferring with Benjamin Franklin in Paris, young Pulaski came to our shores and volunteered his services to our own immortal Washington in the Revolutionary War of 1777. Excellently trained in military tactics, he offered his services as a plain ordinary soldier, deeply in sympathy with the cause of the Revolution. His services were of such a high character that in the Battle of Brandywine he so impressed his military superiors that he was promoted by Congress to an important cavalry commander. In every battle, and especially during the siege of Savannah, Ga., he distinguished himself with valor. He was mortally wounded in action at Savannah, Ga., on October 9, and died October 11, 1779.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski belongs not only to the United States of America, but to every land where human beings are held in subjection and denied the inalienable right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Many cities and towns of the United States have been named in his honor. Boulevards and streets have been dedicated to his memory. In the State of New Jersey a splendid highway extending from the city of Newark to Jersey City, the gateway to New York, was erected and dedicated in his honor, and is known all over the world as the General Pulaski Skyway. Monuments have been erected by civic, fraternal, and religious organizations to the memory of this great soldier. It is only fitting that the Republic he aided in creating should set aside one day in the year when by official proclamation the President of the United States of America is authorized to call upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 11 of each year, and invite the people of the United States to observe the day in schools, churches, and other suitable places, in appropriate services commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

After observing him in action upon the battlefields of the Revolutionary War, General Washington, in recommending him to Congress for appointment as brigadier general, said of him:

This gentleman has been like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country, and sacrificed his fortune and his zeal for these objectives. He deserves from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit.

On each succeeding Pulaski Memorial Day generations yet unborn will learn the story of General Pulaski's bravery and sacrifice given in behalf of the cause of liberty and will cherish the esteem in which he was held by the Father of his Country.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak for a resolution which has for its purpose the honoring of a man who lost his life in a brave effort to bring liberty to the American colonies. Gen. Casimir Pulaski's service in the cause of freedom should not be recognized by Presidential proclamation this year only, as is provided by the amended House Joint Resolution 107, but as a reminder of the sacrifices and devotion to the cause of liberty by those who made this Nation possible, the death of the great Pulaski should be observed and commemorated by such proclamation each year. I, therefore, favor the substitution of Senate Resolution 21, which will make possible this annual observance.

America has been referred to as "the land of freedom" and "the home of the homeless among the nations of the world." We find glory in such references but too seldom do we give consideration to the sacrifices of the men who laid the foundation for such sacrifices. Love of liberty and freedom was stamped on the very soul of America by men like General Pulaski who had the true spirit of liberty indelibly impressed upon their hearts through the form of oppression which they suffered in the land of their nativity. In a letter to Col. R. H. Lee, August 13, 1778, General Pulaski expressed his deep-seated convictions, "Honor and a true desire of distinguishing myself in the defense of liberty was the only motive which fired my breast for the cause of the United States."

Even before his arrival in this country, General Pulaski was renowned throughout Europe for his services in defense of his native Poland. Through the intercession of his French friends, he was enlisted in the cause of the American Colonies by Benjamin Franklin, then in Paris, arriving in this country in August 1777. He early distinguished himself as a volunteer by his courage and exemplary conduct in the operations about my native Philadelphia. His distinguished service was soon recognized by Washington, who wrote as follows to Congress in commendation of his plan to raise a separate corps, "Count's valor and active zeal on all occasions have done him great honor."

On March 19, 1778, Congress sanctioned the formation of the corps, which has been known in history as the "Pulaski Legion." The operations and success of the celebrated corps are well known. When the Continental forces were hard pressed in their campaigns throughout New Jersey, particularly in the Egg Harbor section, and at Charleston, S. C., it was General Pulaski and his cavalry which snatched victory out of apparent defeat. Despite personal illness, General Pulaski, always displaying the courage, energy, and fortitude of a great soldier, rose to the defense of Savannah, and during the assault upon that city October 9, 1779, he received the wound which later caused his death.

General Pulaski lost his life embracing the cause of liberty, defending the principles so deeply rooted in his very nature. His services to a nation struggling for liberty demands the gratitude of a people who enjoy the freedom for which he gave his life.

RIO GRANDE RIVER

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if necessary, to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", and so forth, as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927; but I think it will not be necessary; I think the matter can be disposed of by unanimous consent. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] desires to offer an amendment, which is agreeable.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman will consent to this amendment?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Absolutely; the gentleman's amendment is all right, as I understand it.

Mr. CULKIN. Limiting the scope of the bill?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. With that understanding, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", and so forth, as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande below Fort Quitman, Tex., in cooperation with the United States of Mexico", as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to designate the American Commissioner on the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, to cooperate with a representative or representatives of the Government of Mexico in a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the lower Rio Grande and the lower Colorado and Tia Juana Rivers, for the purpose of obtaining information on which to base a treaty with the Government of Mexico relative to the use of the waters of these rivers and to matters closely related thereto. On completion of such study the results shall be reported to the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of State, acting through the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, is further authorized (a) to conduct technical and other investigations relating to the defining, demarcation, fencing, or monumentation of the land and water boundary between the United States and Mexico, to flood control, water resources, conservation, and utilization of water, sanitation and prevention of pollution, channel rectification, and stabilization and other related matters upon the international boundary between the United States and Mexico or upon a stream or water course constituting or crossing the boundary between the two countries and upon the tributaries of any such stream or water course where international matters are involved; (b) to construct any project or works which may be provided for in a treaty entered into with Mexico as contemplated in section 1 of this act, or which it may be appropriate to construct independently of a treaty with Mexico; and (c) to operate and maintain any project or works so constructed or, subject to such rules and regulations for continuing supervision by the said American Commissioner as the Secretary of State may promulgate, to turn over the operation and maintenance of such project or works to any Federal agency, or any State, county, municipality, district, or other political subdivision within which such project or works may be in whole or in part situated, upon such terms, conditions, and requirements as the Secretary of State may deem appropriate.

"SEC. 3. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of State is authorized, (a) in his discretion, to enter into agreements with any one or more of said political subdivisions, in connection with the construction of any project or works provided for in section 2 hereof, under the terms of which agreements there shall be furnished to the United States, gratuitously, except for the examination and approval of titles, the lands or easements in lands necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance, in whole or in part, of any such project or works, or for the assumption by one or more of any such political subdivisions making such agreement, of the operation and maintenance of such project or works, in whole or in part, upon the completion thereof: Provided, however, That when an agreement is reached that necessary lands or easements shall be provided by any such political subdivision and for the future operation and maintenance by it of a project or works or a part thereof, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, the title to such lands and easements for such projects or works need not be required to be conveyed to the United States but may be required only to be vested in and remain in such political subdivision; (b) to acquire by purchase, exercise of the power of eminent domain, or by donation, any real or personal property which may be necessary; (c) to request the withdrawal from sale, public entry or disposal of such public lands of the United States as the Secretary of State may find to be necessary, and upon receipt of any such request the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands so designated to be withdrawn from any public entry whatsoever, and from sale, disposal, location, or settlement under the mining laws or any other law relating to the public domain, and shall cause such withdrawal to appear upon the records in the appropriate land office having jurisdiction over such lands, and such lands may be used for carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That any such withdrawal may subsequently be revoked by the Secretary of the Interior with the approval of the Secretary of State; and (d) to make or approve all necessary rules and regulations and, in his discretion, to delegate to the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, any of his functions and powers provided for herein.

"Sec. 4. Any moneys contributed by or received from the United Mexican States for the purpose of cooperating or assisting in carrying out the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be available for expenditure in connection with any appropriation which may be made for the purposes of this act."

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CULKIN: Strike out the semicolon after the word "Mexico" in line 5, page 3, and add the words: "and for the repair, protection, maintenance, or completion of works now existing or now under construction, or that may be constructed under the treaty provisions aforesaid, and to construct any project or works designed to facilitate compliance with the provisions of treaties between the United States of America and Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESEARCH VESSEL FOR PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 3013 and to include a report of the Honorable Frank T. Bell, Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, concerning H. R. 3013, a bill introduced by myself and entitled "To provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries", I desire to submit to the Members of Congress a report upon said bill written by the Honorable Frank T. Bell, Commissioner Bureau of Fisheries, and transmitted by the Department of Commerce to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives.

The comments of Mr. Bell upon the importance of the fisheries resources of the high seas, and particularly those of the Pacific coast, are instructive and illuminating. The following are the comments of Mr. Bell on H. R. 3013:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, February 6, 1935.

Subject: Recommendation on H. R. 3013, being a bill "To provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries"

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

For the period from 1879 to 1932 the United States Bureau of Fisheries employed one or more specially constructed marine fishery research vessels capable of conducting studies of our important fishery resources on the high seas. At the present time the Bureau has no such research vessel, and the United States is now the only first-class maritime nation lacking such facilities.

The fisheries provide one of the basic food resources of the Nation, for foods come only from the land or from the sea. In 1932 the fisheries of the United States and Alaska provided 2,613,000,000 pounds of protein food, which modern researches have shown to be essential to the healthful diet of the Nation. The fisheries of the Pacific coast in that year yielded 1,038,802,000 pounds, or 45.8 percent of the total fish production, exclusive of shellfish, of the United States and Alaska. In addition to more than a score of minor fisheries, the yield of the three major fisheries of the Pacific coast—the salmon, the pilchard, and the tunas—approximated 40 percent of the entire United States production.

The salmon fisheries of the Pacific coast and Alaska are the greatest in the world, producing in 1932, 528,626,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $8,160,000, ranking first in quantity and first in value among the Nation's fisheries. Second in national rank in quantity of production is the pilchard fishery, yielding 312,171,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $825,000. Next in rank on the Pacific coast and sixth in rank for the entire country is the tuna fishery, producing 63,431,000 pounds, for which the fishermen received $2,406,000.

The financial return to the fishermen themselves represents but a small portion of the total valuation of these three great fisheries, for all of them support a vast shore industry, producing a staple food commodity of canned fish and great quantities of meal and oil used in human and animal feeding and in a wide variety of technological processes.

In 1932 the salmon industry produced 5,909,000 standard cases of canned fish, 1,389 tons of meal, and 154,000 gallons of oil, having a total evaluation of $26,512,000. Manufactured products of the pilchard fishery amounted to 954,000 standard cases of canned fish, 25,445 tons of meal, and 5,529,000 gallons of oil, having a manufactured value of $3,642,000. The tuna fishery produced 1,206,000 cases of canned fish, 4,123 tons of meal, and 31 gallons of oil, having a manufactured value of $6,280,000.

The total sales values of the products of these three fisheries, excluding the sales of fresh, frozen, and mild-cured salmon, which would considerably augment the total, amount to $47,825,000 in 1932, and this, of course, is considerably below the normal values of these products in previous years. It is apparent, therefore, that these three great Pacific fisheries are of considerable importance to the economic structure of the Nation and should be managed so as to be continually productive.

The fisheries, however, like the forests, are an exhaustible resource. The past 50 years has witnessed the commercial destruction of one valuable food fish species after another. The salmon fisheries in various of its branches are at present menaced by depletion. Competent scientists of the California Fish and Game Commission, after 10 years of exacting research, are seriously concerned over the possibility of depletion of both the pilchard and various species of tunas. The fishing industry in California is likewise aroused to the danger, for the pilchard fishery in that State has expanded so rapidly during the past 10 years that exploitation is now believed to have passed reasonable and safe limits. The most valuable species of tuna, the Albacore, has virtually disappeared, and the next most valuable species of tuna, the blue-fin tuna, has declined from 15,000,000 pounds in 1919 to 1,000,000 pounds in 1932. The yield of canned tuna has only been maintained by an increased utilization of less desirable species and by the extension of the fishery from the in-shore waters of southern California to beyond the Equator on the south and to the Hawaiian Islands on the west.

The experience of the International Halibut Commission demonstrates that high-seas fisheries suffering from depletion can be so regulated as to check the decline and to maintain the productivity of the resource. Governmental control, however, can only be based on sound and extensive scientific knowledge of the biology of the species concerned and the effects of the fishery upon its reproduction and survival. No single State is able to acquire such information for the salmon ranges from California to Alaska, the pilchard from Mexico to British Columbia, and the tunas over the eastern half of the Pacific Ocean from Puget Sound to the Equator. Research as a basis for control must therefore be conducted by the Federal Government.

A research vessel capable of going to sea and remaining for long periods of time is essential to such a program of research. It should be specially constructed so as to employ effective fishing gear of standard commercial size, as well as scientific equipment required for studies of currents, temperatures, and other conditions affecting the reproduction, survival, and movements of fish. As a result of a previous survey of existing facilities, the Bureau is convinced that no vessel suitable for this work exists that can be transferred from other Government services or purchased from commercial service. Based upon experience in the operation of the Albatross II, a steam vessel engaged until its retirement in 1932 in a similar type of fisheries research on the Atlantic coast, and on plans and specifications developed for a new research vessel of the same type as the one herein contemplated, the operating cost, including vessel crews, repairs, and operations, will amount to about $54,000 per annum. In addition, the vessel will require a scientific staff of four fishery investigators and hydrographers at a total salary cost of $11,400 per annum, with subsistence and traveling and operating expense of $5,000, or a total operating cost for the projected fishery investigations utilizing the vessel amounting to $70,400 per year.

The amount authorized in the bill is regarded as adequate for the construction of such a vessel, and in view of the demonstrated need, the Bureau recommends the favorable report and passage of the bill.

FRANK T. BELL, Commissioner.

SOIL EROSION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7054) to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage of soil and moisture resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands of the Nation, resulting from soil erosion, is a menace to the national welfare and that it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide for the control and prevention of soil erosion and thereby to preserve natural resources, control floods, prevent impairment of reservoirs, and maintain the navigability of rivers and harbors, protect public lands and relieve unemployment, and the Secretary of Agriculture, from now on, shall coordinate and direct all activities with relation to soil erosion and in order to effectuate this policy is hereby authorized, from time to time—

(1) To conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the character of soil erosion and the preventive measures needed, to publish the results of any such surveys, investigations, or research, to disseminate information concerning such methods, and to conduct demonstrational projects in areas subject to erosion by wind or water;

(2) To carry out preventive measures, including, but not limited to, engineering operations, methods of cultivation, the growing of vegetation, and changes in use of land;

(3) To cooperate or enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial or other aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, or any person, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary, for the purposes of this Act; and

(4) To acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, by purchase, gift, condemnation, or otherwise, whenever necessary for the purposes of this act.

Sec. 2. The acts authorized in section 1 (1) and (2) may be performed—

(a) On lands owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, with the cooperation of the agency having jurisdiction thereof; and

(b) On any other lands, upon obtaining proper consent or the necessary rights or interests in such lands.

Sec. 3. As a condition to the extending of any benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment and enforcement of local laws imposing suitable permanent restrictions on the use of such lands and otherwise providing for the prevention of soil erosion;

(2) Agreements and/or covenants as to the permanent use of such lands; and/or

(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise to any operations conferring such benefits.

Sec. 4. For the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary, except that employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion may be continued without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act for a period not to exceed 4 months from the date of this enactment; and any persons with technical and expert knowledge, connected with any educational or research institution, may be jointly employed and compensated under this act and by such institution on a basis to be determined by the Civil Service Commission; and

(3) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and perform such acts, and prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act; and any violation of any such regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100.

Sec. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an agency to exercise the powers conferred on him by this act and may utilize the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, together with such personnel thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, and all unexpended balances of funds heretofore allotted to said organization which shall be available until June 30, 1937, and shall assume all obligations incurred by said organization prior to transfer to the Department of Agriculture. Funds provided in H. J. Res. 117, "An act making appropriation for relief purposes" (for soil erosion), shall be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act; and in order that there may be proper coordination of erosion-control activities the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the agency created under this act such functions, funds, personnel, and property of other agencies in the Department of Agriculture as he may from time to time determine.

Sec. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill on which I think there will be practically no division of opinion. It provides for a soil-erosion service.

One of the big problems of this country is the conservation of soil. In recent months, as you all know, there has been a tremendous amount of soil erosion in the West and there has also been soil erosion by water in other sections of the country. This involves what, it seems to me, is a great national problem that calls for solution.

The Public Lands Committee had full hearings on this measure. The Committee on Agriculture has had brief hearings. Unanimous reports have been submitted by both committees. The bill is simple and easily understood. I am going to ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] to explain the terms of the measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 7054, is a conservation measure and probably one of the most important bills that has come before the House during the present session. It conserves the very life of our country—our soil and our moisture.

Studies have been made by several of the Government departments, namely, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior.

The Department of the Interior has at the head of this most important bureau Dr. Hugh H. Bennett, who is recognized as an authority on erosion in this country. About $14,000,000 were expended on approximately 40 projects. Those projects were largely in the arid regions, although the expenditure covered a survey of practically every county in the United States. If there has been any doubt of the necessity for a soil-erosion program, certainly the past 10 days or 2 weeks would eliminate any doubt in the mind of anybody.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell the Members of the House how much money is involved in this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This bill carries no appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much is the gentleman contemplating getting? I notice there is a clause that you are going to get some money out of the bill that we re-committed today. Has any amount been set aside for this purpose?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have no knowledge of any amount that has been set aside, except there was originally $20,000,000 set aside, of which $14,000,000 has been expended. The other $6,000,000 I think has been temporarily loaned to relief agencies, such as the F. E. R. A. That money will be returned, I am advised, and will become a part of the funds necessary to carry out this erosion program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman anticipates, then, it will not cost more than $6,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this bill?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it will cost much more than that amount of money. How much more the entire program will cost I have no idea. Under this bill there is no appropriation called for or set aside.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I want to explain the part of the bill insofar as the appropriation is concerned. This bill will not cost a nickel extra money.

The only reason this bill is being passed at this time is to give the Soil Erosion Service permanency of life. There are no funds provided in the bill, and the money that will be spent through this service would have been spent anyway through the Soil Erosion Service temporarily as it is now set up in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is simply a transfer of authority?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; in making the department permanent.

The reason it is necessary to make the department permanent is this: Many of you will remember that the first speech I made on the floor of the House pointed to this very proposition to create a permanent department of government and coordinate all of the soil-erosion activities through that one department for the purpose of saving money and making count the money that is spent. We have been spending this money through about 14 departments. I have not very much time, but if you will listen to these figures I will show you how important it is that this measure pass immediately. There is not a single Member of Congress whose constituents will not be affected by the passage of this legislation; 125,000,000 acres have now been taken partially, at least, out of cultivation, because of erosion. The erosion is not caused by wind only. As a matter of fact, the wind erosion is the smallest part of the proposition. The erosion that is really stripping the country of its productive soil is water erosion.

It must be remembered that we have only from 7 to 8 inches of productive fertile soil on top in most of our cultivated areas. That is being washed away at the rate of about 100,000 acres annually. In other words, they have lost their fertility.

The bill now under consideration is H. R. 7054, and bears as its author the name of Mr. DEMPSEY, who is my friend, and a soil-erosion enthusiast, but I wish to submit in all fairness that this piece of legislation, which I am wholeheartedly supporting, should have borne my name as its author.

A perusal of the RECORD will show that on January 24, 1935, I offered an amendment to the $4,800,000,000 appropriation bill, providing that all moneys spent on soil erosion, out of that bill, should be spent through the Soil Erosion Service, then in the Department of the Interior. In that speech I pointed out that this department should be created as a permanent department and that all soil-erosion activities should be coordinated through it, instead of through the some five or six various departments who are spending soil-erosion money.

I believe a check of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that this was the first intimation made by any Member of the House, at least on the floor of Congress, advocating that all soil-erosion service be coordinated into this one department, and that the department be given permanent status.

Subsequent to that, on March 1, 1935, I prepared and introduced in the House, H. R. 6319, which was a bill to create a separate division in the Department of Agriculture, to be known as the "Soil Erosion Service." The purpose of this bill was to make of the Soil Erosion Service, a permanent department of Government, so that it might continue to operate and conserve the soils of the United States long after the present emergencies had expired.

Because this Service was at that time under the Department of the Interior, it was felt by some that the introduction of this bill, to put it under the Department of Agriculture, might cause a controversy between the two Departments.

On March 5, 1935, I prepared and introduced H. R. 6432, which provided that the Service be set up, with a permanent status, coordinating all soil-erosion activities in it, in the Department of the Interior.

My purpose in doing this was simply to show the world that I had no choice as to the department that took charge of this Service; that the thing that I was primarily interested in was that the Service have a permanent status and become a creature of Congress, so that it might continue to function as long as it was necessary in order to cope with the devastating results of erosion caused by both wind and water.

I believe that a check of the bills introduced in this Congress will show that these two bills were the first ones introduced attempting to accomplish this purpose.

You will notice that the present bill is H. R. 7054. I am not complaining that the present bill is not a good one. I simply wish to make the above observation, that the Congress and the people of the United States generally might know that I am entitled to at least a measure of the credit for the creation of this important department.

The bill that we are about to pass, H. R. 7054, is not adequate, in my judgment, and I shall attempt to have adopted, in the Senate committee, two amendments, which, in my opinion, will greatly benefit this legislation.

The first will be an amendment to subsection 2 of section 4 of the original bill, which amendment will provide that the personnel of this department shall be built up without regard to civil-service laws or regulations, and that civil-service laws and regulations will not apply to the personnel of said department until 6 months after the passage of the act.

It is my further opinion that the bill, in its present form, does not set up the Soil Erosion Service in the Department of Agriculture as a permanent division of the Department of Agriculture but simply provides that as long as the Secretary of Agriculture wants to keep it alive he may do so. Therefore, I propose to offer an amendment and attempt to have it adopted in the Senate committee, which will say in simple language that the Congress is hereby creating a separate division in the Department of Agriculture to be known as the "Soil Erosion Service."

I feel confident that as long as the present administration is in power it will be a policy of this administration to carry on the function of the Soil Erosion Service, but I am mindful of the fact that coming administrations may not feel so kindly toward the preservation of the soil of this Nation as does this administration.

Therefore, I think it imperative that we not leave it to the discretion of the Secretaries of Agriculture to follow as to whether or not this will be a permanent department of the Government, and the only way, in my judgment, this can be done is to amend the present bill. Both of my original bills took care of this contingency.

I want to now give a few reasons for supporting the present legislation.

In the first place, I am anxious to see it pass the House of Representatives and get speedily on its way to becoming enacted into law, and I feel confident that it can be as easily amended in the Senate as in the House.

The following figures will give some idea of how necessary it is that this all-important undertaking, which is being carried on under the able guidance and leadership of Dr. Bennett, be not hampered by the whims of some future Secretary of Agriculture, and that the department be given an unquestionably permanent status.

There are, normally, in the United States 350,000,000 acres which normally produced crops, and 75 percent of this amount is sloping enough to suffer seriously from water erosion. Two hundred and thirteen million acres are normally planted to clean, cultivated crops. In other words, to crops which are most susceptible to water and wind erosion. It is estimated that most of the top soil has now disappeared from 125,000,000 acres in the United States and 35,000,000 acres have now been abandoned as not being fit for cultivation, primarily because of wind and water erosion, and there are 100,000 acres being abandoned as being not fit for cultivation each year. It is again estimated that wind and water erosion costs the farmers of this Nation $400,000,000 annually.

Three billion tons of soil annually wash from our fields and pastures. It is estimated that 400 million tons of soil pass out through the mouth of the Mississippi River annually, which is enough to build 6 inches of soil on 2,500 Oklahoma farms of 160 acres each. On the basis of a Nationwide survey recently completed by the Soil Erosion Service, it is found that the area of formerly cultivated land essentially ruined by erosion is approximately 100 million acres. This is the equivalent of 625,000 farms of 160 acres each or an area nearly equal to the combined extent of Ohio, Illinois, Maryland, and North Carolina. In addition, and this is the most alarming aspect of the whole problem, an area of approximately 125 million acres of land now in cultivation, has lost all, or the greater part of the more productive topsoil, and as a result is from 2 to 10 times, and in some instances, 40 times less productive than was the virgin soil. And this is still not all. Still another 100 million acres are beginning to lose their priceless topsoil, which is the vital substance of the land.

Thus we have been living in a fool's paradise, with respect to the security of our most basic asset.

We have permitted hundreds of thousands of farmers to become tillers of subsoil, which usually amounts to bankrupt farming on bankrupt land.

Moreover, this virtual ruin of the soil is of a permanent character, jeopardizing the well-being of generations to follow by impoverishing the heritage of those who can do nothing about a present evil that is sweeping across the country like a prairie fire.

It is vitally necessary that the Government, at this juncture, do something to preserve the soil and to stop its eroding, because to build back the soil, after it has been eroded, is a task of well nigh impossible proportions, for under natural conditions of surface stabilization with vegetation, it takes from approximately 400 to more than 1,000 years to build a single inch of virgin topsoil.

Every year erosion removes from our fields around twenty times as much plant food as is taken off by crops. Plant food removed in crops can be restored in the form of fertilizer and soil-improving plants, but erosion takes not only the plant food constituents but the whole physical body of the soil, plant food, and all; and this soil cannot be hauled back into the fields. It is just as much lost, most of it, as if completely consumed with fire.

On the 11th of May 1934 a shadow of coming events swept across eastern United States in the form of a dust storm that originated in the plains of the trans-Mississippi.

For the first time in our history thousands of square miles of land and water along the eastern seaboard were showered with dust particles, blown from unprotected bare fields lying at the heart of the Nation; 300,000,000 tons of productive soil having been swept out of the fields of the stricken area. But that was not the last, because within the last 3 weeks we have seen the same thing, in increased proportions, again occur, increasing to such an extent that dust from the prairies of the Middle West hovered over the city of Washington, actually darkening the sun, causing the inhabitants of Washington to prepare themselves for rain, which they expected to fall out of the gathering clouds. Farmers of Oklahoma and Kansas were forced to abandon their homes. Travel was impaired, and in some instances traffic was paralyzed. The top soil of that great agricultural area was by the wind moved to other sections of the country in such proportion that in many instances growing crops, which were just peeping through the ground, were entirely submerged in dust and dirt. Many of the cattlemen of that section were forced to move their herds of thousands of head, hundreds of miles to new pastures, because the dust and dirt and productive top soil had completely covered the grass which provided sustenance for their cattle.

This is only the beginning, and unless the people of this Nation become awakened to the degree in which we are punishing our greatest resource, the soil, I warn you that ere long we will find ourselves in the condition that many of the old countries of Asia are now in, to wit, a country thickly populated, with not enough productive soil left to furnish foodstuff for its people.

This bill will undoubtedly pass today without hardly a dissenting vote, and I am truly hopeful that it will, with the amendments above suggested, pass the Senate in the same manner; and then I am truly hopeful that this administration will put enough of the funds appropriated by this Congress for relief into this service, that the men who have given a lifetime to the scientific study of means to prevent this devastating erosion may actively combat its destruction and thus keep for the present generation our millions of acres of fertile, productive land, to the end that we may pass down to a coming posterity a land in which they may continue to live, grow, and prosper.

I appeal to you ladies and gentlemen of the House to give this bill your support, and to lend to this department, after it is created, your hearty cooperation; and I sincerely trust that when this department sends its field men out into the field to work with and aid the farmers of this Nation that the farmers themselves will wholeheartedly cooperate with the problem as laid out by the Soil Erosion Service, so ably headed by Dr. Bennett in Washington, and so efficiently administered by Dr. Winters, in my own State of Oklahoma.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I arise to pay a tribute to two men who for years have been largely responsible for the growth of sentiment with respect to soil erosion in the United States. I refer to H. H. Bennett and Samuel W. Phillips. These two men about 10 years ago engaged themselves in working on this proposition, with the result that today we see their work being recognized nationally and the soil-erosion work being transferred over to the Department of Agriculture, thereby recognizing this division as one of the most useful organizations in the entire Government service. Of these two men, I can say that one of them, Dr. H. H. Bennett, is the head of the soil-erosion department. He is the outstanding expert on this subject in America. He has studied this question in the various countries of the world. His writings are accepted as authority everywhere. Besides being an expert in a literary sense, he is a practical man and a man of good judgment. So long as he continues at the head of this work we have every reasonable assurance that the work will be done well. The other man, Samuel W. Phillips, was also a recognized leader in this field. Together these two men collaborated intelligently and industriously in their efforts to show the terribly destructive effect of erosion. Mr. Phillips was a man of great dynamic power. He had been well prepared scholastically, and but for his untimely death he would have achieved greater renown in the work in which his whole life was centered. Although a young man, his skill as an engineer as well as his thorough knowledge of the theory and practice of erosion work made him an invaluable man in field work. He it was who built the first Government erosion experiment station. He built all of the experiment stations built by the Government up until his death in 1934, which occurred while he was engaged in planning and erecting the modern station at Zanesville, Ohio.

The Government service lost a faithful and efficient servant when Mr. Phillip died, and the cause of erosion lost one of its two foremost exponents and advocates. The great sandstorms which are attracting the attention of the country now are true but tragic testimonials to the foresight of these two gentlemen. I hope that Dr. Bennett may live long to carry on the torch of progress flung to him by Mr. Phillips, and that their work may be a blessing to our country and our people as it now appears certain to be.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will not the gentleman look into the splendid services that have been performed by R. A. Winston in connection with this same problem. He will find that he is also entitled to be mentioned.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his kind suggestion and I hope that Mr. Winston may continue the good work that he is doing. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this brief time to indulge in the reflection as to whether or not this bill is really supernumerary. A few weeks ago there was an upheaval in the A. A. A. and all the pink gentlemen were ejected with the exception of Professor Tugwell. Now we learn that Tugwell is to be kicked upstairs and is to have $900,000,000 for the purpose of performing such functions as this bill provides. I am wondering if it is fair on the part of the House to interfere with the jurisdiction of this distinguished gentleman by passing this legislation. I am wondering why you gentlemen of the West do not welcome him with open arms and be content with his handling of this vast sum for this erosion purpose. I am also wondering how your people will feel when they learn into whose hands they have fallen.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentlemen having to do with the utilization of surplus labor in this country that perhaps the best field into which it can be directed is the preservation of the ability of the generations that are to come to live. I want to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture and the other agencies for bringing in this item of legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure proposing to give the Soil Erosion Service, which has already been set up and functioning in a satisfactory manner, a permanent status is, in my judgment, one of the most important bills that the House has considered during the present session.

I desire to congratulate the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], who has been sponsoring this legislation.

Members of the Oklahoma delegation have also been active in sponsoring soil-erosion legislation, and are all enthusiastically supporting the pending measure. It is only natural for those of us in Western States, and especially citizens living in Oklahoma, to be extremely interested in the conservation of our soil.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see such enthusiastic support for this legislation. I regret that there seems to be some little contention among certain Members of Congress who evidently feel they should be entitled to be named as authors of the pending bill. Although I introduced the first soil-erosion measure ever introduced in this House and have been sponsoring and advocating the conservation of soil for the past several years, I have no desire to claim the authorship of this bill. That is not important, but it is of vital importance that a comprehensive soil-erosion program be undertaken and carried out in my State at the earliest possible moment. Our people have finally become "soil erosion conscious", and they realize that it is impossible for the State, county, or local governments to cope with the situation without assistance from the Federal Government.

Today as we consider this bill as the first great step toward the prevention of soil erosion, we have reports of dust storms raging in several Western and Southwestern States. Oklahoma has not escaped this plague in the form of clouds of dust.

But as distressing as wind erosion is proving to be, it is not wasting our soil to the extent that water erosion does. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] a few moments ago gave us some of the figures, showing the thousands of acres of good tillable land that has been laid waste by erosion of the soil. When we take into consideration that 85 percent of the cultivated lands in the State of Oklahoma are suffering serious losses of soil and that nearly 2,000,000 acres of what was formerly good tillable fields have actually been abandoned, due entirely to the loss of topsoil and the washing of gullies, one is made to wonder why this Congress has so long delayed doing something about it.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that 440,000,000 tons of soil in the State of Oklahoma alone are annually being washed from cultivated fields and pastures into the streams of this country? Do you know that more soil went down the Mississippi River last year from the fields of 30 States of this Union than was excavated in the construction of the Panama Canal? Do you know that it would take a fleet of 4,200 trucks of 4,000 pounds capacity loading and unloading every 10 minutes and working 24 hours in each day for 365 days to haul back to those once productive Oklahoma fields the tremendous volume of soil that they lost last year by erosion?

The State of Oklahoma has been hit hardest, perhaps, than any other State of its size and population in the United States. Secretary Ickes, after an investigation, has reported that Oklahoma is the worst eroded State in the American Union. It is estimated that the total annual cost of soil erosion to Oklahoma, including the choking of stream channels, the filling up of reservoirs with silt, the damage to highways and railroads, and the contribution to the cost of flood control on the Mississippi, is at least $115,000,000 per year. Only the State of Texas, approximately three times the size of Oklahoma, has a greater annual loss, which is estimated in that State at $125,000,000 per year. Yet Oklahoma was one of the last States in the American Union opened for settlement. When I tell you that of the 16,000,000 acres of land under cultivation in Oklahoma that more than 13,000,000 acres have suffered serious losses of topsoil, and in a few years much of this land will become practically worthless, you will begin to understand the seriousness of the soil erosion in Oklahoma.

Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I was pleased that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] paid a splendid tribute to the head of the Soil Erosion Service here in Washington. I agree with him fully. Mr. Bennett is no doubt the greatest expert in America on soil erosion, and I feel is equal to the gigantic task that his organization has undertaken. I also appreciate the deserved compliment that the same gentleman, I believe, paid to Mr. Winston, one of his technical experts. In this connection, it is a genuine pleasure for me to pay a humble tribute to Dr. N. E. Winters, regional director of the Soil Erosion Service in Oklahoma. Dr. Winters is not only a real expert on the subject of soil erosion, but he knows how to get the job done. There is no question but what he has done more than any other dozen men in Oklahoma to arouse the citizens of my State to the need of combatting this giant enemy of the farmers of our State.

May I add here that in the past few weeks I have had two conferences with the President of the United States on the importance of this administration recognizing the necessity to combat soil erosion now. I feel that the country is fortunate, and that the State of Oklahoma is fortunate, that this problem of preserving our top soil has been turned over to such men as we have in our Soil Erosion Service.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that there is so little opposition to this bill. I had hoped there would be no opposition at all. Frankly, I am surprised at the statement just made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN], who, because of his evident dislike for Dr. Tugwell, would actually go so far as to oppose this meritorious measure. At least that was the feeble excuse he offered.

Let us not quibble at this late hour over personalities. Let us not delay or camouflage the issue. There is no question as to the importance of this legislation. Let us do our duty now. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate in 2 minutes what my colleague from Oklahoma has said in regard to this bill, and the importance of it to Oklahoma.

I wish I had the time to give you a pen picture of what has happened in my part of Oklahoma, which is the central western part of the State.

That country has been in settlement for 43 years. We never had any trouble with this kind of wind erosion until within the last 2 years, when there has been such a scarcity of rainfall.

For instance, our annual rainfall is about 28 inches, and that is abundant to produce a great harvest. In my district, and it is an average district in size, we produce one-half of the total cotton of the State of Oklahoma. We have produced 15,000,000 bushels of wheat, but last year, due to the extreme drought, and a rainfall not exceeding 7 inches for 15 months, that district probably produced only 75,000 bales of cotton, and you will find that is so all over the country.

I think I can give the reason for the wind erosion. I have lived there long enough so that I know something about the soil.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to voice the assertion that I do not think this bill goes far enough. I am in hearty sympathy with the set-up. It is my belief that many other land problems should be taken away from the Department of the Interior and placed in the Department of Agriculture—in particular, all phases of land use involving production from the soil, tilled or untilled.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SOIL-EROSION CONTROL

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, permit me to make a few observations.

A great deal has been said and written about soil erosion and its control in recent weeks. Spectacular dust storms in the Great Plains region focused the attention of the Nation upon this problem and the pressing need of action to combat it. We have heard much of the intensified program of erosion control to be undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, with the Soil Erosion Service as the basic agency.

But little has been said or written about the part already played by the Department of the Interior in this important field of erosion control. As a matter of fact it was the Department of the Interior that pioneered this work; it was in the Department of the Interior that the Soil Erosion Service was established 18 months ago to carry out the first organized campaign against soil erosion ever undertaken in this country. To the Department of the Interior should go whatever credit there may be—and I believe it is considerable—for the inception of the program which has now attracted the attention of the Nation.

It was Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes—an ardent conservationist—who caused the Soil Erosion Service to be created in September 1933. And it was Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes—the same ardent conservationist—who approved the allocation of $5,000,000 of public-works funds for prosecution of a Nation-wide erosion-control program, and who authorized additional allotments totaling $15,000,000 as the work progressed. Upon his recognition of the erosion problem and his initiative in taking entire steps to cope with it, I desire to congratulate the Secretary of the Interior.

During its 18 months under the Department of the Interior, the Soil Erosion Service set up a network of demonstration areas covering representative watersheds in the most important agricultural regions of the country. Within these projects, farmers are cooperating with the Service in a complete program of soil-erosion control under which every parcel of land is treated in accordance with its peculiar needs and adaptabilities.

Forty of these projects are under way in 32 States. Thirty-seven of them are essentially demonstrational in character and average about 200,000 acres in size; the remaining three are much larger, ranging from eight to sixteen million acres, and involve complete land rehabilitation programs on a large scale.

Since each of the demonstration projects is located in an area of acute erosion, and since conditions within the project are typical of those obtaining in the entire surrounding region, the erosion control work directed by the Service within the limits of each project constitutes a practical demonstration of the most effective measures of land conservation adaptable to the general locality. In the Piedmont region, for instance, measures applied to the land within each demonstration area are applicable in the Piedmont belt as a whole.

The 37 demonstration projects now in operation cover an aggregate of approximately 4,000,000 acres in the most severely eroded sections of the country. Each of the 37 projects, however, is representative of at least one million, and in some cases as much as ten million acres of surrounding territory, so that conservatively figured, the demonstration work being done by the Service has an influence for at least 37,000,000 acres outside of its demonstration areas.

To this vast acreage must be added, of course, the 35,700,000 acres actually covered by the three large land utilization projects being carried on by the Service in the Southwest.

In aggregate, therefore, the erosion-control work actually under way under the direction of the Soil Erosion Service is an influence on upwards of 75,000,000 acres, an appreciable segment of this Nation's agricultural land.

This impressive program has been in operation only 18 months and has cost to date less than $8,000,000. Although a total of $20,000,000 was allocated to the Service by the Public Works Administration, $6,000,000 was later impounded. Of the remaining $14,000,000 less than $8,000,000 has been actually expended or obligated, leaving slightly more than $6,000,000 available for completion of work in the 40 demonstration areas.

In the matter of employment the program has furnished constructive work for upward of 11,000 C. C. C. workers in the 51 E. C. W. camps assigned to the Soil Erosion Service. These youths have been given an opportunity not only to earn a living in the out-of-doors, but to learn the highly technical work of erosion control. Many of them, taken from city streets, have come for the first time in their lives into healthy contact with the land.

In addition to the C. C. C. workers, however, the Service has furnished employment to some 5,000 laborers and to some 1,000 so-called "white-collar workers" in supervisory and administrative capacities. When the C. W. A. program was in operation a considerable number of these workers were employed and some F. E. R. A. labor has also been used from time to time.

Moreover, the Service has inaugurated one of the most constructive employment plans in the Federal service. Cognizant of the need for highly trained personnel if the national program of erosion control was to be properly supervised and directed, the Service several months ago originated a unique work-training system for recent college graduates.

Under this plan some 800 young men just out of college and confronted with discouraging impossibility of obtaining employment, have been hired by the Service on a temporary basis at the prevailing P. W. A. wage for labor, ranging from 40 to 50 cents an hour. They were selected from lists of eligibles recommended by the agricultural and technical schools in each State. As a part of their jobs they are required to attend lecture courses after office hours several evenings a week, the object being to apply to the specific and highly technical problems of erosion control, the academic training the young men have received in agronomy, agricultural engineering, soils, and other subjects involved in erosion-prevention work. Indications are that the number of trainees eventually may reach 1,500.

In setting forth the actual accomplishments in land treatment achieved thus far by the Service, it should be pointed out that the primary objective of the program has been one of demonstration. The amount of work done on the land is relatively unimportant; what matters is the nature of the work and its availability for profitable inspection by a large number of farmers having erosion problems comparable to those being treated by the Service in each major farm and grazing region.

Every indication points to the fact that the work of the Service on its 40 widely scattered projects probably has been the most important factor in awakening farmers of this country to the imminent menace of accelerated soil erosion. Conservative estimates place the number of visitors to the various projects during the past year and a half at close to a million. Editorial comment in the local and national press reflecting the attitude of the people has been uniformly commendatory.

In point of actual work done, moreover, the Service has obtained significant results during its comparatively brief period of existence. Nearly 7,000 miles of terraces have been constructed on lands suited to this type of control. These structures have been carefully engineered, in contrast to the haphazard terracing done by farmers themselves in certain localities in the past, and have demonstrated their reliability and sturdiness under conditions of severe stress. Some 5,000 terrace outlets have also been built in connection with the terracing. Nearly 200,000 check dams have been built to check the yawning gullies that have scarred and ruined millions of acres of crop and pasture lands. About 4,000,000 feet of gully bank has been sloped and prepared for the planting of erosion-control vegetation, and nearly 10,000,000 square yards of bank—roadside banks and gully banks—have been planted with soil-holding trees, shrubs, and grasses.

Of even more importance, probably, is the work called for under cooperative contracts between farmers and the Service. Some 200,000 acres, under these agreements, are to be strip cropped by their owners in accordance with the recommendations of the Soil Erosion Service experts. Some 325,000 acres are to be contour tilled, by agreement with the Service; 300,000 will be terraced; 416,000 acres will be planted in erosion-resisting crop rotations; and more than 100,000 acres will be permanently retired to pasture or forest.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate in 2 minutes what my colleague from Oklahoma has said in regard to this bill and the importance of it to Oklahoma. I wish I had time to give you a pen picture of what has happened in my part of Oklahoma, which is the central western part of the State.

That country has been in settlement for 43 years. We have never had any trouble with this kind of wind erosion until the last 2 years, when there has been such a scarcity of rainfall.

For instance, our annual rainfall is about 28 inches, and that is abundant to produce a great harvest. In my district, and it is an average district in size, we produce one-half of the total cotton of the State of Oklahoma. We have produced 15,000,000 bushels of wheat, but last year, due to the extreme drought and a rainfall not exceeding 7 inches for 15 months, that district probably produced only 75,000 bales of cotton; and you will find that is so all over the country.

Western Oklahoma is an undulating prairie country, drained by the Canadian, Northfork, and Washita Rivers. Naturally, there are many small streams tributary to these rivers. The country has an unusually large area of arable land; and due to the rolling nature of the land, when heavy rainfalls occur, these smaller streams quickly overflow and the flood water is carried in great volume and with speed to the rivers. The banks of these streams are steep, and the only lowlands of consequence are in the river bottoms. When the waters from the tributaries are precipitated into the rivers they are soon filled and the overflows occur.

The rainfall in this country is not uniform, and is not evenly distributed throughout the seasons. It is a country where we have terrific downpours of rain, and it is not unusual for from 12 to 15 inches of rainfall to occur in a period of 24 hours. This may be expected to happen once within every year or so.

In order to conserve the moisture that we get from these rains, the farmers have adopted a system of mulching, by which I mean the ground is plowed frequently and to a shallow depth, thus creating a mulch of dust on the surface to prevent the escape of the moisture underneath this covering. It will readily be seen that if there is not sufficient rainfall to soak through this dust mulch or covering to unite it with the solid ground below, this mulch will be taken up by the winds and blown away. On the other hand, if there is a seasonable distribution of the rainfall and there is sufficient of it to wet the ground thoroughly, there would be no loose top soil of any consequence to be blown away.

Various kinds of experimentations have been made by the farmers for the protection of their land against wind erosion in ordinary times, such as listing the lands and, of course, planting the various coverage crops. There has also been a great deal of terracing done by the farmers themselves as well as small dams built by them for the protection of their lands and to assure them a supply of stock water.

From these experimental undertakings by the farmers they have learned that there is much value in terracing as well as in the building of dams or reservoirs as a protection against wind and water erosion of their farms.

Very naturally when sudden heavy rainfalls occur the water carries thousands of tons of loose topsoil down the small streams into the rivers, and as a consequence many thousands of acres of the very choicest farms have been rendered practically worthless by water erosion alone. There is not only the loss to the fertility of the land by reason of the washing away of this topsoil in times of storm, but each year thousands of dollars worth of property loss is sustained by reason of the floods.

The unprecedented drought, extending over the last 3 or 4 years, has brought an additional and very noticeable and material destructive agency to light so far as the soil is concerned, and that agency is the matter of wind action on the loose topsoil or mulch which I mentioned a while ago. Perhaps the damage from wind erosion had been of consequence for years, but it never became noticeably alarming until this unprecedented drought.

This section of the State of which I speak is adjacent to the level plains country of the Texas Panhandle on the west and is south of the Kansas plains, and there is very little protection from the devastating winds that have brought so much havoc to that part of the country since the beginning of this great drought period.

The irregular and spasmodic rainfalls, which are characteristic of the country, have been a problem for those interested in soil conservation for many years; and as I have stated heretofore, many undertakings have been made by the farmers to protect their lands against erosion from these heavy rainfalls. But this added menace gives to the people of my district the double problem of protecting their lands both from water and wind erosion, and with this goes the further question of protection from flood damage.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I may confidently say that my congressional district is the most productive one in the State of Oklahoma, and I doubt if there is any farm area of like dimensions in the United States that is capable of producing more crop values in normal times than the Seventh District of Oklahoma; in fact, just a few years ago the Department of Agriculture gave out the information that my home county, Washita, ranked first in the United States in the value of its farm products. That happened at a time when farmers received something like an adequate price for the crops they raised; and while I specifically mention my home county, the other counties of my district are very similar in their agricultural value to my home county.

There is no doubt, with such an agricultural country as I have described, the Congress could do no better than to give its most serious consideration to take steps to aid those people in saving those fertile lands from the continued and aggravated menaces that threaten their destruction; and I think it is absolutely necessary to put into effect immediately a vast program of land conservation, including terracing, reservoir construction, a sensible program of forestation by planting trees where trees can be grown, and coupled with this there should be inaugurated a great educational program of farm cultivation so that in future years the people of America will have this reservoir of agricultural wealth to help support the Nation.

The experimentations made by numerous farmers so far have been of practical value, and have also been of incalculable value to the people of that section of the country. For instance, it is now well known that contour listing, terracing, planting of proper cover crops, and building water reservoirs have all greatly added to the conservation and productivity of the soil, and have furnished a large measure of protection against wind erosion.

There is no need to present any argument as to the importance of the educational program mentioned along the lines of proper farm cultivation, taking into consideration the natural wind and rain conditions that prevail in that section of the United States.

I have heard it stated that Oklahoma is the veritable battleground of the elements; that it is a country of great extremes in temperature and water fall and of extreme calms and fierce wind storms.

The authorities of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma have done a tremendous amount of very valuable work in connection with soil erosion and improved farming methods, and in this work they have taken into consideration the very weather conditions that I have mentioned, and with which, of course, those people are familiar. Dr. Winters, of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma, has been intensely interested in and has most intelligently directed the minds of the people of that State to the great importance of caring for the soil, and I believe under his further guidance and direction a sane, practical solution of this great problem will be brought about.

In the discussion of this bill on the floor of the House some startling figures have been submitted which show conclusively the importance of immediate enactment of legislation to put an end to the ravages of water and wind erosion throughout the Nation.

It is shown in these figures that approximately 125,000,000 acres of farm land have been stripped of their top soil, and, for practical uses, this land has disappeared from the Nation's assets. It is further shown that 35,000,000 acres have been abandoned, and this land is no longer fit for cultivation, because of the ravages of wind and water, and that approximately 100,000 acres are being abandoned each year. It is estimated that wind and water erosion is costing the Nation's farmers $400,000,000 a year, that 3,000,000,000 tons of soil are washed annually from our lands, that 400,000,000 tons of soil pass out through the mouth of the Mississippi River each year.

I do not know how accurate these estimates are, but they are alarming, to say the least of it; and to those of us who are interested in farm life and who know nothing else but farm life, the subject looms as of paramount importance from a national aspect.

In my opinion, the Congress cannot go too far in its efforts to remedy this terrible condition which threatens the foundation of agriculture.

The figures mentioned above are estimates of our national loss. I do not know whether or not estimates for our section of Oklahoma would be more alarming than for the Nation at large, but, knowing as I do the nature of the soil, and from a residence of nearly 40 years in that country and from daily observation of conditions there, I am constrained to the belief that there is a more imperative demand for speedy, lasting, and permanent legislation looking to the protection of that soil than in any other section of the country.

What I have said in regard to the Seventh District of Oklahoma is, I am informed, equally applicable to the entire State, as well as to southeastern Colorado, western Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, and the Texas Panhandle. I am sure that there is not any difference in the character of people that live in this vast farm area. They have all the courage, endurance, and perseverance of the American pioneer. They are home-loving people. They have their entire investments there. Their families live there and they are asking of the Congress to assist them in preserving their holdings and maintaining their homes until normal conditions in rainfall shall return.

The damage wrought in this area in the last few months from wind erosion cannot at this time even be approximately reckoned, but it is enormous, and an unfortunate aspect is that it has caused physical and mental suffering beyond the ability of any person not familiar with conditions to conceive.

I am impressed with the fact that if any effective aid is to be given in meeting and helping to solve this problem immediate action is of the utmost importance, and that any delay will not only cost another year's damage from soil losses and dust storms but will entail further physical distress to the thousands of people residing in that section of the United States.

ALLEVIATION OF THE HAZARDS OF OLD AGE, UNEMPLOYMENT, ILLNESS, ETC.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing I send to the desk for immediate consideration House Concurrent Resolution 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 19 (Rept. 573)

Resolved, etc., That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 copies of the hearings held before said committee relative to the bill (H. R. 4120) to alleviate the hazards of old age, unemployment, illness, and dependency, to establish a social-insurance board in the Department of Labor to raise revenue, and for other purposes, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

The resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES, REPAIR OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4760) to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS AND THE RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech made by Mr. Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, and also a speech by Mr. Robert L. O'Brien, of the Tariff Commission, made over the radio a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio addresses of Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and Hon. Robert L. O'Brien, Chairman of the Tariff Commission, March 23, 1935:

ADDRESS OF HON. CORDELL HULL, SECRETARY OF STATE

The Chairman of the Tariff Commission, Mr. O'Brien, will explain to you the difference between the old and the new methods of tariff revision in this country. I hope, in the next few minutes, to show you how the trade-agreements program ties in with the administration's plan for domestic recovery and the promotion of friendly relations with other countries.

The international exchange of goods is of immediate and vital concern to every individual among us. An exchange of goods makes business move, and without this exchange there is stagnation and unemployment. Trade stimulates productivity at both ends of the transaction. In addition to the production of the goods themselves, work is created in the transportation of the export and in the transportation, distribution, and marketing of the import.

By the trade-agreements program, now well under way, we are seeking to persuade other countries to join us in breaking down excessive barriers to trade so that its movements may be less hampered and its volume increased. Agreements already concluded with Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium, and others which are in prospect, indicate that many other nations are willing to cooperate. The agreement with Cuba—in force 6 months—has resulted in a marked stimulation of trade and it is reasonable to expect that other agreements will have like consequences.

At the high mark of 1929, our exports were valued at over $5,000,000,000. Every State in the Union shared in this business, some to the extent of hundreds of millions. And do not imagine that these huge exports were confined to coastal States. Interior States also participated heavily in our export trade in 1929. The export products of Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Iowa, and Missouri were valued at over $1,000,000,000.

All States suffered severe losses in exports between the years 1929 and 1932. New York lost $708,000,000, Michigan $306,000,000, Texas $357,000,000, California $231,000,000, Illinois $172,000,000, and Pennsylvania, $240,000,000. Can anyone reasonably doubt that this drastic decline in our foreign trade from $5,000,000,000 in 1929 to only $1,600,000,000 in 1932 has swelled the tragic ranks of the unemployed and has meant a very definite lowering of the standard of living in this country? But the indirect losses are far greater. For example, the decline of exports of automobiles from Michigan resulted in a decline in urban employment and buying power, and thereby caused a loss of domestic markets for our agricultural population.

The improved business condition of the past year and a half has been intimately related to a revival of our export trade. From 1932 to 1934 the exports of the United States increased from $1,611,000,000 to $2,133,000,000, an increase of 32 percent. The exports of automobiles and machinery increased from $222,000,000 to $435,000,000. The export of copper increased threefold, and iron and steel semimanufactures fourfold.

These increases in exports have unquestionably contributed substantially to the measure of recovery of business and employment thus far achieved. And the effects are not to be limited to the direct increase in employment in the export industries. The expansion of the export industries has, in turn, had a cumulative effect upon related industries, resulting in an ever-widening expansion of economic activity and employment in the domestic sphere. For example, the increase of automobile exports and other metal manufactures including machinery and electrical equipment, constitutes an important part of the increased demand for iron and steel products, plate glass, lumber, and at least 20 other commodities, and the increased purchasing power of the additional workers in these fields in turn has created a larger demand for consumption goods of all sorts, including the demand for agricultural products.

I cite these facts with no easy optimism. We are confronting a crisis in our foreign trade. The recent expansion of foreign trade does not yet rest on secure foundations. And because of the close relationship of our foreign trade with fundamental and full domestic recovery this crisis concerns every one of us vitally interested in the continued development of domestic business revival and the expansion of employment.

In 1934 this country enjoyed an export merchandise surplus of $478,000,000. The service items, including tourist expenditures, immigrant remittances, interest, and dividend payments, were substantially in balance. It is clear that the merchandise export surplus rested upon the insecure, uncertain foundation of a vast inflow of gold.

Events of the last year should make every American realize the precarious situation of our export trade, particularly on the continent of Europe. Trade-control measures are becoming day by day increasingly complicated and restrictive. These measures are designed to protect the balance of payments of foreign countries, to prevent an abnormal outflow of gold. Of one thing we may be sure—so long as our merchandise export surplus is balanced by gold imports the signal is given to our foreign customers to impose ever-increasing restrictive measures against our exports. Day after day and week after week throughout the year nations caught in this serious dilemma are trying by desperate means on the one side to check imports and on the other side to force exports. An outstanding development of the past year has been the use of bargaining quotas allotted to various countries in return for forced expansion of exports. In many parts of the world, especially in central Europe, clearing-exchange agreements and trade-compensation arrangements have put international trade very nearly back to a state of outright barter. This means a decrease rather than an increase in the sum total. Some countries have allocated exchange on the basis of other countries' purchases of their products. In some countries export trade is wholly or in large part controlled by import monopolies or centralized trade-control boards.

The effect of all these measures has been to restrict and to canalize trade into abnormal channels and to force a diversion of trade. These measures tend toward bilateral balancing of trade, which for the United States would mean that our exports would be cut down to the low level of our merchandise imports. Economic nationalism has never inflicted upon nations more serious and lasting injuries, affecting the well-being of peoples, the stability of governments, and civilization itself, than during recent years.

It is, therefore, urgent in the interest of American trade and world recovery to exert a determined leadership in the direction of liberal commercial policies in order to restore the equality of treatment upon which alone our foreign commerce can thrive. It is for this reason that the administration is basing its trade-agreements program upon the principle of equality of treatment, or nondiscrimination, in opposition to special bargaining and preferential arrangements. It is for this reason that we stand for a revival and strengthening of the most-favored-nation principle and against the exclusive policies of strict and narrow quid pro quo arrangements. The very economic lives of more than 30 countries depend upon foreign trade, and their collapse has disastrous effects upon us, as we have seen since 1929.

We believe that foreign countries are already beginning to learn that all these various devices bring, in the final analysis, no relief to their trade position. Trade is diverted, but it is not increased. It is a striking fact that international trade has been most stagnant and suffered the severest reverses during the past year in those very areas where the rigorous control devices to which I have referred have been most extensively developed.

The United States stands at the crossways. Of all the countries in the world, it is in the freest position to assume a world leadership in the adoption of saner commercial policies.

What do the supporters of an excessive and prohibitive tariff have to say in favor of such excesses? One of the most used arguments is that such tariffs protect American workers against the "pauper labor of Europe and Asia" and the American people generally from a low standard of living. But does it? I may first remark that all agree to the maintenance of reasonable or moderate tariffs that will not allow excessive or unreasonable importations of competitive products. A study made of 36 typical industries which are on an export basis or not aided by the tariff and 36 industries whose products are highly protected shows that in 1929 the average remuneration of wage earners in the highly protected industries was $595 less than that of the worker in the industries which received no tariff benefits. The average annual income in the unprotected industries was $1,704, while that in the highly protected industries was $1,109.

Those who contend that a virtually prohibitive tariff is absolutely essential overlook or ignore certain basic facts. According to the census of 1930 there was approximately 50,000,000 gainful workers in the country. More than half of this number, employed in service industries, transportation, wholesale and retail business, public utilities, and building trades, are not only not helped by the tariff but, as consumers, actually hurt thereby. Ten million farmers, a large part of whose products are exported and sell at world market prices, are obliged to buy in a protected market. Of the remainder, a large proportion are engaged in industries that are on an export basis, such as the automobile industry, electric apparatus, industrial and agricultural machinery, and other mass-production industries, which get no assistance from the tariffs, and are, indeed, injured by it. Many others are engaged in industries of a distinctly domestic character not subject to foreign competition.

There is not a country which does not have one or more specialties in which it is peculiarly proficient and which contributes to the necessities and amenities of world society. International trade helps to stimulate and spread throughout the world scientific discoveries and inventions, to broaden the national horizon of every nation and every people, and to enrich life everywhere.

For 6 years nations have vainly striven separately to restore prosperity. But I would emphasize as strongly as I can the fact that these efforts at national recovery have not fully succeeded because of the destruction of international trade. It follows that a vigorous effort to rebuild that trade is essential if we do not wish the struggle back toward prosperity to be too long delayed.

It would be inexcusable if we did not make a vigorous effort to ameliorate the frictions and animosities which tend to produce wars and impede the progress of civilization, by attempting to remove one of the chief causes. In these days no nation can live wholly to itself without imposing upon its own people and the peoples of other countries unjustifiable deprivations and hardships. Therefore, despite all difficulties, and despite the artful propaganda of selfish interests, we intend to continue to strive for an economic cooperation among nations that will make the vast riches of the world more readily accessible to all, remove as far as possible the causes of envy and aggression, and so take a determined first step in the direction of greater economic well-being and universal peace.

ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT LINCOLN O'BRIEN, CHAIRMAN UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

The United States has for generations been a leader among the trading nations. In colonial days it was an exporter of fine wooden ships, of spars for the King's navy, of tobacco, and ship stores. In the last century King Cotton, safe in his southern stronghold, shipped the fiber that filled the spindles of the world's looms; the bread basket of the Mississippi Valley fed all Europe; and scores of cattle ships carried the cargoes that put beef on the tables of Europe. The twentieth century saw a change. Still cotton, still wheat, and pork, and tobacco helped fill the ships that linked the resources of the United States with the markets of the world. But now newer products, from new industries, announced the rising industrial strength of the United States. Copper, petroleum, fruit, canned goods, automobiles, machinery, and electrical equipment—these are the latter-day goods with which America holds her own in world markets. Every American tourist wandering around foreign cities has felt a homely pleasure in the familiar names of familiar products in shop windows.

In 1929 the nations of the world exchanged over $33,000,000,000 worth of goods. Our share in that gigantic export trade was over $5,000,000,000—15 percent of all international commerce.

Five billion dollars is a lot of money—more than the President is requesting for the whole works-relief program for the next year. Yet, being told that those $5,000,000,000 in exports were not quite 10 percent of the total production of the United States in 1929, some people have hastily concluded that the whole parcel of export trade is hardly worth the worry, and that in domestic concerns lie the beginning and the end of all our prosperity. To the southerner, who knows that without cotton exports half the cotton acres of the South will lie fallow, refutation of that doctrine is needless. The raiser of hogs, the grower of oranges and apples, the canner of fruit, the tobacco plantationist, the oil driller, the automobile manufacturer—all these and many more need no reminder of the importance of foreign markets.

By 1933 world exports were scarcely a third of their total in 1929. The United States had held its own; it still accounted for about 15 percent of that trade. But now, instead of $5,000,000,000, the export trade contributed only $1,674,000,000 to the national trade and income. What that shrinkage has meant to the South, to California, to the Pacific Northwest, to Detroit, and to all the other communities and regions whose prosperity is dependent in large measure upon a flourishing export trade is evident to us all.

A nation that has left few devices untried in the sad game of adding bricks to the top of tariff walls must not be surprised if the first result is strangled trade and the second result is new millions on the relief roles.

No one has ever assumed that the present restriction of output is anything more than a desperate and temporary expediency. No one has ever claimed that there is any solution for depression in a mass-production economy such as ours except mass production at a profit to worker and employer. That means markets, markets at home and abroad, extensive and intensive. The recapture of old and the creation of new foreign markets is the goal of the trade-agreements program, a goal whose achievement carries a promise of increased employment for every State in the Union.

The stalemate in world trade is not to be ended by good wishes or pious resolutions. It was created by the raising of trade barriers to insurmountable heights. It will be dissipated by skillful, patient negotiations to reduce some of those barriers to levels at which trade can be resumed. No one country can do the job alone and unaided. But in the belief that a great country can show the way to the council table, the United States has determined to assume the leadership.

Tariff making as Americans have known it is not a process which can be expected to increase foreign trade. Its aim has usually been to restrict imports; and if imports are restricted beyond a certain point, foreigners, starved for the dollars with which to buy, drop out of American markets as buyers. Tariff making in the past has been a congressional job. It is not a job Congress has relished. A session in which tariff revision was taking place was always a Roman holiday for lobbyists and petitioners. It was a time when every producer, every manufacturer, no matter how poor his claim, how high his costs, how wasteful his methods, or how small his industry, begged, cajoled, or demanded the added tariff which, he maintained, was necessary to keep his shop open. It mattered not if the process was ill-suited to American labor. It mattered not if the whole Nation was heavily taxed for the sake of a neighborhood. It mattered not if the exclusion of the foreign product lost us better customers abroad than ever the protected industry could offer. Nor could an overworked Congress be expected to give to tariff making that broad guardianship of national as against regional and special interests which the country has a right to demand.

A countless procession of special pleaders crowded the Committee on Ways and Means. Scarce a Congressman escaped pressure from some producer in his constituency. Every temptation existed for logrolling. Once thrown into the House the bill inevitably received scores of amendments which could not, under the circumstances, receive even the hurried consideration which the committee had given the rates in the bill it proposed. In the Senate unlimited amendment still further hammered at the proposed rates. It is a matter of small wonder that the resulting tariff act, instead of giving reasonable protection yet preserving the main channels of foreign trade, represented all too often a complex schedule of ill-considered subsidies.

The reciprocal tariff act with the trade program it has made possible proposes a sounder method of tariff making. It substitutes the national welfare for special favors. It offers fair hearing to every interest but permits no single one to be guiding. It provides, in an atmosphere removed from the inescapable turmoil of the political arena, for a study, by commodity experts and economists, of every tariff rate in whose preservation or change there is a promise of general gain.

The trade-agreements program seeks an increase in the trade of the United States. But it recognizes that trade is a business of both buying and selling, and that if we do not buy we cannot sell. The program begins, then, with the proposal to negotiate a series of commercial trade agreements with friendly countries. With three countries: Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium, agreements have already been concluded. With many others negotiations are in progress. It is altogether worth while for the American people to understand exactly how the American negotiators are equipped best to serve American interests at the council tables around which the terms of agreement are settled. This process has been called "Yankee horse trading." But if in that phrase there is any hint of hasty bargaining, it is proof that the whole program is misunderstood. Follow through, from beginning to end, this new making of tariffs.

It is decided to investigate the desirability of entering negotiations with, let us say, Belgium. The new interdepartmental trade-agreements committee organizes a Belgium committee, on which sit members of the Departments of State, Agriculture, Commerce, the Treasury, of the Tariff Commission, and of the office of the special adviser to the President on foreign trade. All the fact-finding resources of the Department of Commerce, Department of Agriculture, and of the Tariff Commission are put to work on an analysis of our exports to Belgium to determine which of our exports have been most important to American agriculture and industry in years past and which ones have been most grievously handicapped by Belgium tariffs, embargoes, or exchange restrictions. In the Tariff Commission, meanwhile, our imports from Belgium are subjected to an equally close scrutiny. Many things must be determined: How large have imports been in relation to domestic production both in Belgium and in the United States? What is the margin of protection accorded the American industry? How much of this protection is actually needed? Is the American industry strong, virile, successfully filling its place in American economy? For each American industry a patient, accurate survey is made by experts who have for many years studied that particular industry.

Equipped with these studies, the interdepartmental committee is able to determine which rates might be reduced with the clearest margin of gain to American industry, to American workers, and to American consumers, in return for reductions in Belgian duties on exports from the United States.

Meanwhile it has been publicly announced that preparations are in progress to begin negotiations with Belgium, and that all interested persons are invited to present briefs and to appear at public hearings. Two groups now come forward to offer their oral and written testimony. One group consists of those producers of products of farm, forest, and shop who, having lost foreign sales, petition the negotiators to obtain from Belgium the concessions by which they might be won back. The other is composed of all those producers and representatives of communities who fear that concessions to Belgium, which may increase our imports, will affect their interests adversely. It is the purpose of intelligent tariff making to reconcile these two points of view in the general interest. No important industry can be sacrificed for the sake of a few dollars' worth of exports. Nor, on the contrary, can the predictions of doom of an industry, fearing the threat of increased imports, be allowed to block a trade agreement which promises a clear margin of national gain through a revived export trade. There is as much room for intelligently selective reciprocity between the United States and, say, Canada as between New York and California. There is as great a chance of gain to both regions in the one case as in the other.

Out of this mass of orderly data the contributing agencies of Government can now select two groups of items: One consisting of the concessions which, if granted by Belgium, promise the largest gain for American exports to that country; the other consisting of the concessions which the United States can safely make on the rates of duty on those imports which are supplied chiefly by Belgium.

There have been accusations that this is tariff making by star-chamber proceedings behind closed doors. Much of it is carried on in private, to be sure. Economic analysis of the patient, time-consuming sort which has been described, is not very amusing. It is not newsworthy. It is not done well in open committee under the watchful eye of the well-fed lobbyist. Nor are negotiations with foreign powers successfully started or completed under free-for-all conditions.

There are certain tests by which the American people must determine the validity of a tariff policy—the commercial policy—which their Government offers them. The American people must demand that the leaders of American policy be not swayed by political pressure; that they be not misled by the partial testimony of biased persons. They must be able to expect that no effort has been spared in the search for an accurate solution of the entire problem. They must be able to believe that the policy as it stands is a policy written in the interest of the whole people. The trade-agreements program has that ideal; it is being carried out in that spirit.

Certain irresponsible interests in this country have persisted in portraying the reciprocal trade-agreements program as a process in which a few light-hearted Government officials sit down with representatives of foreign governments and proceed to hand over American business to the foreigner, thus throwing American laborers out of work and destroying American investments. These statements, these implications, these innuendos, are flagrant untruths. I want to make it perfectly clear that the chief objectives of the reciprocal trade-agreement program are to create employment, to protect the interests of American industry and agriculture, to increase rather than decrease the worker's wage and standard of living. And you may rest assured that no proposed trade agreement ever reaches anywhere near adoption unless the best-qualified experts of the Tariff Commission, the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Treasury, and the Department of State, after months of detailed study, are in substantial agreement that those objectives of greater employment and greater return for labor, industry, agriculture, and commerce will be attained.

But there is a larger and a deeper reason for this attempt to liberalize the world's trade than even the material advantages which may reasonably be expected to follow. This larger reason lies in the contribution of widening trade and widening human relations to a better understanding of one another among the peoples of the world. After all, this is fundamental. I remember the morning nearly half a century ago when our class was graduated from Harvard College. We had been invited to breakfast at the home of the president, Charles William Eliot. The breakfast did not amount to much. That was not his long suit. But the words that he spoke to us have always seemed to me, as I have reflected on them in the years that followed, of the bread of the eternal life. He said that from that day forth our paths would fall in countless directions. We would be in different political parties and in different religious bodies and of different vocations, interests, even hobbies; but in one thing we could remain united, and that was in our purpose to belong to the liberal and progressive elements of each and all of these groups in which we found ourselves, and through them and in them to exert our influence for a better world order, a better understanding of the nations to one another, and so strive for the ultimate triumph of those ideals which we believed basic to liberality and progress. My belief is that the trade-bargaining plan upon which the administration is now at work is in line with this great and inspiring mandate.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURE, REPAIRS OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 4760. The gentleman from New York withdraws his objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill. The Clerk reported the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There seems to be some confusion because this is a bill on the Consent Calendar. It is a departmental bill. It is made clear by the gentleman from Georgia what it is, and those who challenge bills on this side of the House agree with him that it would be proper to have it brought up at this time. I offer this explanation because there are others here who would like to have their bills in the same category but it cannot be done. This bill is a special bill with a special recommendation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman explain the effect of the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Under the statute today, when a ship goes to a navy yard there can be expended only $300,000 in 1 year on repairs. The bill would permit a ship to go to a navy yard and permit an expenditure of $600,000 over a period of 2 years. It is in the interest of economy, because when a ship is in drydock it may develop that more than $300,000 worth of repairs will have to be made. The ship will then have to go back to the fleet and then come back again to the drydock the next year.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does this in any way affect the west coast ship repair work as compared with the east coast?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This will probably help the Bremerton Navy Yard in the gentleman's district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to state that there is a difference between this gentleman's bill and the other, because there was an understanding that this bill would be called up. My objection to the bill relative to the appointment of a clerk to a judge was made because I do not believe we ought to have a lot of small bills come up at this late hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman spoke about a navy yard in the district of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, the same thing applies to the Boston Navy Yard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the total appropriation expenditures for repairs or changes to a vessel of the Navy undertaken in a navy yard shall not exceed $600,000 for any two consecutive fiscal years: Provided, That if, during the overhaul of a vessel, the estimated cost for such overhaul having been approved as within the limits herein imposed, accomplishment of essential items will involve expenditures in excess of such limits, the Secretary of the Navy may, and he is hereby authorized, appropriation otherwise being available, to complete the work, and it shall thereupon be his duty to report to the Congress at the next regular session thereof the expenditures from each of the appropriations involving expenditures in excess of the authorized limit for such work: Provided further, That such parts of the act for March 2, 1907, March 3, 1909, and August 29, 1916, contained in section 468, title 5 of the United States Code, as relate to statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes on naval vessels, are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAKES PLEA FOR FEDERAL AID FOR SCHOOLS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I attended hearings before the House Committee on Education, which committee has been considering bills proposing Federal aid for weak rural schools throughout the Nation. Among the bills proposing Federal aid for our schools was one introduced by me and is now pending before the Committee on Education. It is known as H. R. 1552.

Hon. Harry Hopkins, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, appeared before the House Committee on Education Thursday, March 21, at which time he gave the committee some very valuable information. I was present and heard his statement. I have since read his testimony, and I find that in some instances his statement with reference to rural schools was altogether misleading.

Administrator Hopkins, after telling the committee that all the rural schools in America last year only received $14,583,659 Federal aid, said, and I quote from his testimony, a copy of a portion of which I now hold in my hand:

We believe we were successful in keeping every rural school in America open during that school term.

Feeling that his statement was grossly misleading, I called Mr. Hopkins' hand at that time.

I will read a portion of the stenographic report of the hearing in question:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. With reference to Mr. Hopkins' statement that no rural schools have closed in Oklahoma for lack of funds, I am advised that in one county of my congressional district there are more than 800 school children out of school now. These schools are closed. A number of rural schools have closed in every county in the district I represent in Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. They are not closed because they do not have the money.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is certainly mistaken in that statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am sorry, but in Oklahoma we have guaranteed all of the money she needs to keep open every school in Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON. You may have guaranteed that no schools would close. But it is like the fellow in jail. There may not be any law to put him there but he is in jail just the same. I tell you, Mr. Hopkins, many rural schools in Oklahoma have already closed their doors, because they don't have the money to keep going.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is up to the State superintendent of education.

Mr. JOHNSON. In Stephens County, Okla., for example, I am advised that in one consolidated school district, several hundred children are out of school. In Grady County, some 18 rural schools are closed, so I am told, because they do not have the money and cannot get the money on which to operate. The same situation prevails in a majority of the counties in the State of Oklahoma.

I do not want to be unfair to Mr. Hopkins and it is not my purpose to quarrel with him. It is true that he qualified his statement several times before he finished his testimony. The following is one of his qualifications, taken from the official record.

Mr. HOPKINS. I know of my own knowledge of no rural school in America that has actually closed other than a few schools that have a very small number of pupils and in some cases where there are other reasons.

Mr. Speaker, in support of my statement that many rural schools have actually closed in Oklahoma because of insufficient funds on which to operate, I desire to read a telegram from our State superintendent of public instruction, Hon. John Vaughan, addressed to me under date of March 25, 1935. It is as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 25, 1935.

Hon. JED JOHNSON,

Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

One hundred and twenty-seven schools, having 8,600 pupils, actually closed. Four hundred and fifty schools taught 1 to 3 months, hoping to receive pay from some source. State emergency appropriation recently available for 7½ months. One thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight districts, having 6,700 teachers and 250,000 pupils, will close school short of normal term if Federal aid is not available. Applied for $1,600,000 Federal relief January 16. Was allocated $200,000, but none paid to date. This amount is not sufficient.

JOHN VAUGHAN,
State Superintendent.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I have no disposition to engage in a controversy with Mr. Hopkins. I will go further and say that after hearing him testify I feel that he is reasonably friendly to the cause of education, but I am unwilling for the word to go out to the country that no rural schools have closed because of lack of sufficient funds on which to operate.

I desire also to say to this House and to the country that the tax-burdened, drought-stricken, but honest, patriotic citizens of Oklahoma have shouldered heavy loads of taxation in a desperate effort to keep our schools open. But they have gone their limit. Because of conditions over which they have no control, many of our good citizens are unable to pay their taxes. Many others have lost their homes, and I assume that similar conditions prevail in many other States of the Nation.

This Congress ought to do something about it. Too long have we delayed taking definite, affirmative action. The fact is, this Congress has been in session about 3 months and although schools have been closing almost daily throughout the land since last January, this Congress has made no serious effort to do anything about it.

This is one of the real problems facing the country. We must educate our children now or it will be too late. Many other things classed as emergency for which Congress has doled out millions could well afford to wait rather than our school boys and girls who will be the citizens of tomorrow.

Again I want to call your attention to my bill known as H. R. 4552, proposing what I believe to be a permanent solution of this problem. My bill was drawn in collaboration with the Schoolmasters Club of Grady County, Okla. It also has the endorsement of many of the leading educators as well as other prominent citizens and taxpayers of the State and Nation. I am hopeful that the Committee on Education will report out my bill, or some similar bill that will give immediate and permanent relief to this trying and perplexing problem.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with my remarks a copy of my bill.

A bill to provide for the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia in maintaining the public-school system, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby declares that the cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia is necessary to prevent the premature closing of elementary and common schools in many communities, thereby resulting in wide-spread unemployment of teachers and depriving millions of children of those educational opportunities necessary for the training of citizens in a democratic government.

Sec. 2. There is hereby authorized and directed to be made available, out of any funds appropriated for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, such funds as will enable the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia to maintain their regular school terms as maintained during the school year of 1931 and previous years.

Sec. 3. (a) Funds made available under section 2 of this act shall be disbursed in accordance with such rules as may be made by the Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

(b) For the further cooperation of the Federal Government in maintaining the public educational system, the President of the United States is authorized and empowered to include, in the annual Budget, estimates for an appropriation equal to not less than $10 per enumerated school child in the elementary and secondary schools.

(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to not less than $10 per enumerated school child in the elementary and secondary schools, to be immediately available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, such amounts to be allocated to each county treasurer in each State, or to some other official designated by the Governor, for the use of the schools.

(d) No school shall receive any of the assistance as provided in subsection (c) of this section unless such school is unable by taxtion, or the use of other public funds that may be available, to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months; and in case the Secretary finds that only part of the assistance provided in subsection (c) of this section is necessary to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months, then only such part of such assistance shall be provided as is necessary to maintain a standard school for a term of 9 months.

Sec. 4. After the passage and approval of this act all school warrants or other certificates of indebtedness for payments of teachers' salaries or salaries of other employees in the public schools of the United States, regularly issued by the proper officials, and unpayable for the reason that necessary taxes, assessments, or other revenues have not been collected, shall be eligible, when properly endorsed by the payee, for purchase or loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Loans on all such warrants or certificates of indebtedness shall be made at their face value at rates of interest not to exceed 1 percent per annum.
